Clinton pledges aid for flood zone

The Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa – President Clinton brought encouraging words, a symbolic hand with sandbags and the promise of at least $2.48 billion in disaster relief to the flooded Midwest Wednesday.

"Hang in there," he told residents lining up for drinking water.

During a fast-paced stopover on his way back to Washington from a Hawaiian vacation, Clinton viewed the flood damage from the presidential helicopter, offered support at a long water line, answered questions about help on a radio call-in program and even filled a few sandbags.

"I have seen whole towns flooded. I have seen massive amounts of farmland flooded, but I've never seen anything on this scale before," Clinton said.

The president chose Des Moines for his second Midwest inspection tour in 10 days because the area has been particularly hard hit, earning the dubious distinction of being the largest American city ever to lose its water supply.

Flood roundup, aid details – A3

A quarter of a million people were still without safe drinking water after flood waters overwhelmed the city's water purification facilities.

Clinton announced he had forwarded to Congress Wednesday a request for $2.48 billion in emergency spending in the current budget year, which ends on Sept. 30. And he said that amount, double what he proposed in his earlier visit, would probably need to be expanded as well.

He pledged to push Congress to approve whatever amount was necessary and suggested the administration may put forward a proposal for extra assistance in the next five days.

The U.S. Treasury would have to borrow the emergency funds, causing the deficit to rise. Clinton said, however, he wasn't concerned because estimates of the deficit have fallen $20 billion since he took office.

The largest chunk of the $2.48 billion package, some $945 million, would go to disaster relief administered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture. An additional $145 million would be earmarked for road and bridge repairs and rebuilding of damaged dams and other flood control works.

After a helicopter tour in which Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad pointed out flooded fields, damaged railroad bridges and the city's contaminated water works, Clinton visited with Des Moines residents at a water distribution center and then took calls on WHO, the Des Moines radio station where a young Ronald Reagan got his break as a sportscaster.

"I talked to people who had lost everything, their farms and businesses. It was a very moving thing," Clinton recounted to callers.

He used the radio program to stress that people who need help should contact their local office of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, where he said they would receive "one-stop shopping" to help work them through the maze of fed-

Judge drops charges of molesting, injury against Shoshone man

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

SHOSHONE – Charges were dismissed Wednesday against a former Richfield teacher accused of sexually molesting a girl and physically abusing another.

Glenn O. Tremayne, 64, of Shoshone wore a smile as he walked out of the Lincoln County courtroom with his wife and other relatives after his preliminary hearing.

"I knew I was innocent," Tremayne said, declining to comment further. "We could tell you a lot, but we'd better not."

Tremayne was charged with lewd conduct and with injury to a child, both felonies stemming from statements made by girls whom his wife baby-sat.

Testimony from Twin Falls pediatrician Dr. Bart Adrian that a 6-year-old girl told him she was molested while pinned to a bed was not enough to send Tremayne to District Court for trial.

Adrian said the girl's physical examination revealed no evidence of sexual abuse. That doesn't mean she wasn't molested, only that there was no severe injury to her genitals that left scarring or other evidence, Adrian said.

"There is not substantial evidence of a crime being committed," 5th District Magistrate John F. Varin ruled. Lincoln County Prosecutor Jennifer Brown can refile the charges if she chooses, Varin said.

Brown faced an uphill battle soon after the hearing began Tuesday, when the girl who made the allegations refused to tell her story on the witness stand.

The girl's mother struggled with her emotions while listening to Varin's ruling. Her eyes filled with tears as she clenched her fists in frustration. She and her family left the courtroom immediately without commenting on the decision.

Tremayne was arrested June 23 at his home, and spent a week in jail before being placed under house arrest.

He retired in 1989 after teaching across the West for 35 years. The final six years of his career were spent in Richfield.

The mother of the 6-year-old girl testified Wednesday that she and her daughter were watching a television movie that dealt with child sexual abuse when her daughter told her she had been molested while staying with Glenn and Irma Tremayne.

On the witness stand, the girl confirmed she had "touching problems" with Glenn

NEA survives bid to cancel funding

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON – The National Endowment for the Arts survived an attempt to cancel its funding Wednesday as House conservatives sought to revive a debate over art works they say are unfit for taxpayer support.

The House voted 322-105 to kill a move by Rep. Phil Crane, R-Ill., to delete the NEA's $175 million allocation from a 1994 spending bill covering the Interior Department and related agencies. The House did not take final action on the measure.

While the NEA's supporters contended the agency has sponsored important operas, orchestras and economically beneficial programs, critics objected to what they said were obscene art projects.

Rep. Bob Dornan, R-Calif., complained the NEA had funded material that cannot be discussed in televised House sessions.

Rapid cooling may hit planet

The Associated Press

NEW YORK – Future global warming may lead to abrupt and disruptive periods of markedly colder climate in countries bordering the North Atlantic Ocean, a new study suggests.

Such fast shifts could pose trouble for agriculture and other economic sectors, said researcher David Peel.

He and colleagues found evidence of repeated abrupt coolings in Greenland during the generally warm period before the last ice age, with average temperatures dropping by 25 degrees Fahrenheit within one or two decades.

One cold spell lasted about 70 years and another went on 750 years, he and scientists from eight European countries reported in Thursday's issue of the journal Nature.

The study focused on climate between 135,000 and 115,000 years ago.

Reno fears gay policy won't stand

The Baltimore Sun

WASHINGTON – Attorney General Janet Reno has been trying to steer the Pentagon away from a "don't ask, don't tell" policy for gays who remain in military service, apparently because she is troubled about being able to defend such a policy in court.

President Clinton is due to get a recommendation today from Defense Secretary Les Aspin on options for a new White House order to replace the total ban on homosexuals or lesbians in any of the armed forces.

For several days, it has appeared that the final recommendations would be to allow gays to remain in the ranks so long as they do not reveal publicly or in private discussions that they are gay. The policy would end past practices of asking about sexual orientation and aggressively investigating suspected gay men and women in the ranks.

Reno's efforts, disclosed by individuals familiar with the Clinton administration's internal debate on the issue, illustrate the dilemma that government lawyers expect to face if, as appears likely, Reno fails in her attempts to influence those changes.

Any "don't ask, don't tell" policy would, if finally adopted, have to be defended by Justice Department lawyers, even though they and Reno reportedly harbor real doubts about the chances of making a successful defense.

Federal water tax targets irrigators

By Drew DeSilver
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – It's only a small part of the deficit-reduction bill Congress is hammering out, but a proposed surcharge on irrigation water could cost Magic Valley farmers hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Tucked deep inside the House-passed version of the bill is a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to levy a minimum of $10 million a year on users of federal reservoirs and other water facilities.

The surcharge would rise to at least $15 million a year in three years, U.S. Rep. Mike Crapo said.

The bill does not spell out just how the surcharge would be collected. One possibility is that the Bureau of Reclamation would assess irrigation districts, and the districts would pass the assessment on to individual farmers.

Crapo

The surcharge likely would be based on the amount of water stored in federal reservoirs, such as American Falls and Palisades reservoirs. One proposal would be to charge irrigators 50 cents per acre-foot of water, rising to 75 cents the second year and $1 the third and subsequent years.

The Twin Falls Canal Co. has 248,368 acre-feet of storage in American Falls and Jackson reservoirs, General Manager Vince Alberdi said. At 50 cents per acre-foot, the surcharge would cost the company's 4,000 customers $124,184 the first year.

That would work out to 62 cents extra per share, Alberdi said, on top of the regular $18 assessment to maintain and operate the canal system. Each share in the canal company entitles the holder to 1.23 acre-feet.

That may not seem like much, Alberdi

Weather summary

Idaho was cloudy and showery in the north, but mostly clear across the south Wednesday afternoon.

The cloud circulation into the Gem State was generally from the southwest, tracking diagonally out of northeast Oregon and eastern Washington into central and northern Idaho. Afternoon radar displays showed extensive showers and thundershowers through the central mountains north into the upper panhandle.

Light rain showers were occurring in some valley locations as well. Heaviest rainfall reported was .17 inch at Lowell. Mullan had less than .10 and Lewiston had less than .05. Moscow had a trace.

The warmest temperature in the state Wednesday was 84 degrees at Hagerman. Soda Springs reported the coldest at 25. Elsewhere in the nation, the highest temperature was 110 degrees at Lake Havasu City, Ariz. Truckee, Calif., reported the lowest temperature at 28 degrees.

Rain scattered from coast to coast; Northwest shivers

The Associated Press

Rain and thunderstorms were scattered from the West Coast to the East on Wednesday while cool weather in the Northwest dropped temperatures to record lows.

At midday, showers and thunderstorms extended over the Pacific Northwest, the northern Rockies, the northern three-quarters of the Plains, the lower and middle Mississippi Valley, the Tennessee Valley, the Ohio Valley, the eastern Gulf of Mexico states, and much of the central and southern Atlantic Coast.

Severe thunderstorm watches were issued for parts of eastern Pennsylvania, southeastern New York state, New Jersey, Delaware, central and eastern Maryland, northern and central Virginia and the District of Columbia, and for parts of Colorado, the National Weather Service said.

Flooding continued over the Mississippi River and its tributaries. With additional rain, flash flood watches were posted over much of southwestern, west-central and central Missouri and most of Kansas.

Thunderstorms dropped 3 inches of rain in one hour near Nebraska City, Neb. Other thunderstorms dropped hail an inch in diameter at Mantua and Verga, Pa. Wind in thunderstorms gusted to nearly 60 mph at Lancaster, Pa.

Heavier rainfall during the six hours up to noon MDT was 1.63 inches at Sedalia, Mo.; and .97 at Wilmington, Del.

High temperatures and high humidity continued over the central Atlantic Coast, with heat advisories over the Carolinas. New York City hit a high of 90, the 10th day out of 11 that the city hit 90 or above, before rain dropped the temperature to 78.

Temperatures remained cool over parts of the Northwest. Williston, N.D., hit a record low of 43 and Worland, Wyo., had a record low of 48. Billings, Mont., tied its record of 49 and Medford, Ore., tied its record at 44.

Somalis call for revenge against U.S.

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Militiamen fired on U.N. headquarters and other sites Wednesday, hours after militants distributed leaflets calling for revenge attacks on American soldiers.

There were no immediate reports of casualties.

Aid programs were at a virtual standstill in Mogadishu, and relief efforts in famished rural areas were halted by gunbattles in the city, aid agency officials said.

In another sign of trouble for the 27-nation mission, the United Nations asked Italy to remove the Italian general in charge of the 2,400 Italian troops stationed in Somalia for not following orders, the head of U.N. peacekeeping operations, Kofi Annan, told reporters in New York.

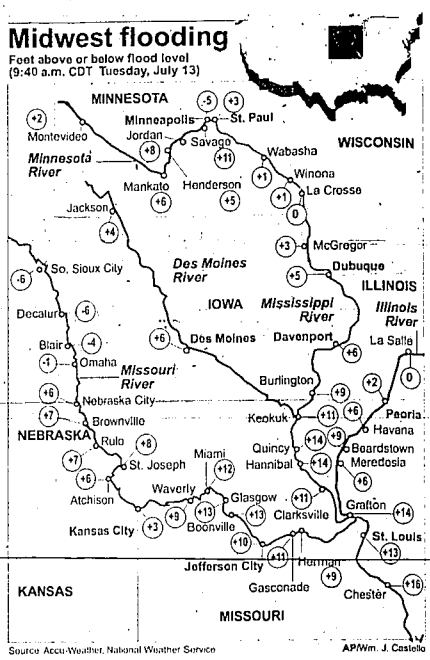

Annan declined to say how Gen. Bruno Loi had defied U.N. command. There were unconfirmed reports he negotiated with Somali clan lords and may have waited for instructions from Rome rather than immediately follow U.N. directives.

In a radio interview broadcast in Italy, Loi denied disobeying U.N. orders.

The incident comes amid Italian unhappiness at U.N. forces' attacks against fugitive warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid and his supporters.

Tremayne, but would say only that Tremayne kissed her with an open mouth and once followed her into the bathroom.

When Brown pushed further, the girl said she did not want to talk about it with Tremayne in the courtroom.

The incident is alleged to have happened more than a year ago.

Tremayne also was accused of throwing 5-year-old Amanda Plath into a chair, causing red marks on her ribs and under her arm.

Irma Tremayne said she watched the incident and testified that her husband only led the girl to the chair and made her sit down after the girl hit him in the back.

News of the allegations have spurred other people to come forward with complaints that are being investigated, Brown said.

She said the girl named in the molesting allegation will receive counseling and may be able to testify later. No decision about refiling charges or pursuing additional charges had been made, Brown said.

"Right now I'm licking my wounds," she said.

said, but it is.

"Our farmers are operating on the edge anyway, and this just further erodes their ability to make a living," he said. "You bet we're opposed."

The surcharge could hit Jerome County farmers even harder. Ted Diehl, general manager of the North Side Canal Co., said his 2,000-to-3,000 customers could see their rates go up anywhere from $2 to $7 an acre.

"I don't think the farmers will like this," he said dryly.

It is unclear what the money raised by the surcharge will be used for. Sheri Chapman, executive director of the Idaho Water Users Association, said the original version of the surcharge earmarked the money for a Bureau of Reclamation fish and game restoration fund. But Crapo said the version approved by the House did not appear to have any such earmarking provision.

The House approved the "reservoir surcharge," as it is known, when it narrowly passed President Clinton's deficit-reduction plan in May. However, the Senate dropped the surcharge when it passed its version of the plan in June.

The House and Senate plan to begin meeting today in an effort to write a compromise measure and send it to Clinton for his signature by early August.

Crapo said he would fight to get the surcharge removed from the final bill. While he opposes all the tax-increase provisions of the plan, Crapo was especially critical of the lack of an upper limit on the surcharge, calling it "appalling."

"There's a floor, but no ceiling," he said. "There are no safeguards in place to prevent this tax from being jacked up every time someone gets a whim to use it for whatever special-interest purpose."

Chapman said his group was surveying its members on how the surcharge might affect them and will forward the results to Crapo and Sens. Larry Craig and Dirk Kempthorne.

eral relief efforts.

"We are going to have a coordinated, effective and compassionate effort," Clinton pledged, stressing repeatedly that FEMA had changed for the better since receiving harsh criticism last year for the federal government's slow response to Hurricane Andrew.

Clinton urged Congress to move quickly to approve the aid measure, something that Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole pledged would be done.

Damage estimates from Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, South Dakota and Wisconsin put the flood's cost so far in the $3 billion range — about $2 billion for destruction of crops and $1 billion in other property damage.

Clinton said he hoped the final legislation would be on his desk in a couple of weeks and the money released "almost immediately" afterward.

He flew here overnight from a three-day vacation in Hawaii, the final stop of a journey to last week's economic summit in Japan. He left late in the day for Washington.

Lawmakers say aid won't cover losses

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farm lawmakers praised the Clinton administration Wednesday for quick action in assembling a $1 billion package for farmers whose fields are flooded but warned that it would not even cover half of the crop losses.

"When we get done with the numbers, we're at a level equal to 15 percent or 16 percent of the crop," said Rep. David Minge, D-Minn., estimated as the House Agriculture Committee began reviewing the package.

Clinton is seeking $900 million on top of $100 million already earmarked for crop loss payments.

More rain, but Des Moines escapes

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) – Torrential rains worsened flooding Wednesday in four Midwestern states but spared Des Moines.

There, for a fourth day the only running water for 250,000 people was in bloated, coffee-colored rivers.

Elsewhere, the tally of broken levees along the Mississippi and Missouri rivers continued to rise, and lesser waterways also spilled over their banks as slow-moving thunderstorms dumped prodigious amounts of rain.

In Quincy, Ill., sandbag crews tried to save the only bridge connecting the state and Missouri for at least 100 miles in each direction after the Mississippi knocked a 2,000-foot hole through a levee.

"This is just like a war zone," said Quincy Mayor Chuck Scholz. "Coming in from where the levee broke last night, I saw two little girls waiting for the bus, no more than 8 and 10, standing there with shovels in their hands. I just about lost it."

In Dodge City, Kan., flash flooding on low-lying streets from up to 5 inches of rain swept about 15 cars into a heap Tuesday night. Rescuers had to break one car's windows to free a woman and two young children.

In Jefferson City, Mo., the Missouri River broke through a railroad embankment acting as a levee west of the town of Glasgow on Wednesday morning, forcing evacuations 25 miles downstream in Franklin and New Franklin, where about 1,300 people live.

"The river is like a full bucket where you pour a cup of water in it and a cup flows out," said Andy Adams of Missouri's Emergency Management Agency.

The flooding, which began more than a month ago, has been blamed for at least 21 deaths, 13 in Missouri. Damage has been put in the billions. About 6,500 National Guardsmen were on duty in Iowa, Illinois and Missouri, where more than 30,000 people have been flooded out of their homes.

Clinton cut short a Hawaiian vacation to return to Iowa and was shocked by how much worse the flooding had become.

The president said he was unaware of any time when a U.S. city as large as Des Moines has been without water for as long. As volunteers and National Guardsmen bolstered the sandbag levee around the city's water-treatment plant, officials hoped to restore running water to 250,000 people by Sunday but said it wouldn't be drinkable for a month.

Skies were overcast but the rain held off as Clinton toured the area by helicopter. Officials had worried that heavy rains could push water over the levee surrounding the water works, as happened early Sunday, contaminating the drinking supply.

But farther to the south, thunderstorms moving as slowly as 5 mph dumped 3½ inches in two hours in Nebraska City, Neb., where streets were flooded.

The National Weather Service said the persistent deluges were causing flash floods in parts of southern Iowa and Nebraska and northern Kansas and Missouri.

In Des Moines, the Des Moines and Raccoon rivers were stabilizing but remained badly swollen, running the color of light coffee. Forecasters said more thunderstorms were likely to rumble across the region through the end of the week.

Des Moines radio stations were filled with commercials for portable toilets and for hardware stores touting new shipments of sump pumps and with calls for volunteers to help distribute jugs of water.

In Missouri, the Salvation Army had 16 mobile field kitchens open between St. Louis and the Iowa line, serving 14,000 meals daily. The effort was dubbed Operation Noah's Ark.

Trans-Iowa bicycle tour still scheduled

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) – Boats are still the vehicles of choice in much of Iowa, but thousands of bicycles are being readied for an annual 525-mile tour across drier parts of the state.

Managers at The Des Moines Register are closely watching flooded areas as they make plans for RAGBRAI XXI, short for The Register's Annual Great Bicycle Ride Across Iowa.

FEMA director faces old enemy in Midwest floods

WASHINGTON (AP) – When floods or tornadoes struck Yell County, Ark., county administrator James Lee Witt would sometimes reach devastated farms even before the sheriff's deputies.

He saw the victims' stunned faces and felt a rescuer's rush of adrenalin, a former aide says.

The experience set Witt on the path to the Federal Emergency Management Agency. He was sworn in as the nation's disaster chief in April, after serving four years as director of Arkansas' emergency office.

As it cuts a path of destruction through the Midwest, the Mississippi River is giving Witt his first national test.

It's a calamity he can feel at home with: The Mississippi has long been his nemesis.

The river swamped crops, drowned livestock and wrecked homes in Arkansas in 1990, when Witt was head of the state emergency office.

"It was kind of a mini version of what's going on in Iowa now," said Jack DuBose, deputy director of the Arkansas Office of Emergency Services.

Witt, 49, is the first director to bring to FEMA a background in state disaster relief.

President Clinton cited that experience when he chose Witt to shape up the beleaguered agency. FEMA came under attack last year for responding too slowly to Hurricane Andrew in Florida. Congressional studies have found the agency's managers lack experience and drive.

On Wednesday, Witt and Clinton toured Iowa, where flood waters have submerged homes and farms and contaminated drinking water, causing millions of dollars in damage.

Earlier this month, Witt surveyed similar damage in Missouri, Illinois and Wisconsin. And he did what he had done in Arkansas – reach out to people in need.

OMB outlines flood aid

The Associated Press

The White House Office of Management and Budget released a fact sheet detailing key points in President Clinton's proposed flood aid package.

• $800 million, including standby support, to be used to provide disaster relief to businesses and individuals.

• $900 million to reimburse farmers for crop losses. This would be in addition to $100 million the president released on July 4.

• $100 million for road and bridge repairs.

• $153 million to be administered by the Department of Housing and Urban Development for disaster-related community development and rehabilitation of damaged low-income housing.

• $100 million for economic redevelopment administered by the Commerce Department's economic development administration.

• $65 million to the Army Corp of Engineers to make emergency repairs to dams and other flood control facilities.

• $45 million to the Agriculture Department to support watershed and flood prevention programs.

• $300 million in increased disaster loans for the Small Business Administration.

• $4 million to the Department of Health and Human Resources to support public health efforts dealing with the flooding.

• $5 million to support Coast Guard efforts related to the flood.

Defense satellites help track high water levels

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Weather Service and Defense Department are combining images from their satellites to monitor the floods in the Midwest.

Data from the Defense Meteorological Satellites is sent to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration processing center in Suitland, Md., where it is combined with images from NOAA satellites.

The microwave imagers in the satellites can see through clouds and detect the difference between dry land and water, according to NOAA officials.

The combined flood monitoring is part of a military-civilian program to share weather information, said Patricia Viets of NOAA.

Study shows costs limit health care

WASHINGTON (AP) High cost and lack of insurance are the most common reasons Americans give for not seeking needed medical care, according to a national survey.

Some 13 percent of women and 9 percent of men said they did not get care they needed at some point during the past year, according to the survey. The poll, in connection with a private group seeking to draw attention to women's health problems, was released Wednesday.

Of the people who did not get needed care, 51 percent of the women and 59 percent of the men said that "it cost too much."

An additional 27 percent of the women and 29 percent of the men said the care was not covered by medical insurance.

The survey of 2,500 women and 1,000 men was conducted in February and March by Louis Harris and Associates for the Commonwealth Fund, a national philanthropy located in New York City.

A statement from the Commonwealth Fund said the survey was conducted in connection with a new organization, the Commission on Women's Health. The organization, the statement said, "will seek to document and draw public attention to the extent of women's health problems and break through the myths that obscure these problems from being recognized publicly."

Among the survey findings:

• Seventy-four percent of both sexes said they had no gender preference in a doctor.

• When asked to rate the competence of their regular doctors, 91 percent of the women and 89 percent of men surveyed rated their physicians as either excellent or good. Eight percent of the men and 10 percent of the women rated the doctors fair or poor.

• Ninety percent of the women surveyed and 89 percent of the men said their doctors were either excellent or good at answering questions honestly and completely.

• Women were asked if their own sex made any difference in the way their doctors treated them. Eighty-two percent of those surveyed said no and 10 percent said yes.

2 Clinton nominees gain OK

WASHINGTON (AP) A Senate panel endorsed two nominations attacked by conservatives Wednesday, but not before some Republicans said that one of them represents a Clinton administration attack on the Boy Scouts of America.

Conservatives put aside doubts about Sheldon Hackney, the president of the University of Pennsylvania picked to head the national Endowment for the Humanities.

Hackney's nomination was approved 17-0, after Sen. Dan Coats, R-Ind., said that complaints that Hackney had supported "political correctness" at the expense of free speech and a free press amounted to "questions, not disqualifications."

Coats and other conservatives reserved their fire for Clinton's nomination of San Diego school superintendent Thomas W. Payzant to be assistant secretary of education for elementary and secondary education.

The 13-4 vote sending the Payzant nomination to the Senate floor occurred after several Republicans complained that the educator had banned the Boy Scouts from San Diego's schools during classroom hours because of the youth organization's policy against homosexuals. Payzant's ruling allowed the Boy Scouts to meet in the schools at night.

Coats contended that Payzant is one of several Clinton administration nominees whose careers show bias against Boy Scout policies.

"For the life of me I don't understand what this administration has against the Boy Scouts of America," Coats said.

But Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., said: "I think it's ridiculous to suggest that this administration is engaged in some sort of anti-Boy Scout crusade."

Payzant defended his actions during his confirmation hearing last month. He said they were necessary to implement a school board policy that brought homosexuals under the system's anti-discrimination guidelines.

And he said that even though he had been a Boy Scout for eight years, he thought it was important to support the rights and needs of gay students.

End detention crisis now – vote 'yes' on bond issue

The urge to vote "no" Tuesday is surely a powerful one.

Why spend good money on a bunch of little shots who steal cars, burglarize homes, smoke dope and fight?

The reason is simple: Even punks need a safe place to stay when they get in trouble, and they don't have such a place now. The fairgrounds is a poor substitute.

Twin Falls County voters on Tuesday will get a chance to fix this long-running crisis in southern Idaho, and we hope they do so by voting "yes."

Let's recap again where the crisis stands:

• Wayward local kids are routinely hauled 398 miles away to Lewiston, because the county's temporary lockup in the Flowers and Produce Building at the fairgrounds in Filer is often full.

• Just last week, a 17-year-old thug from Nevada escaped from the Flowers and Produce Building. He's still on the loose. What was he in for? Spraying Mace at a shoe-store employee inside the Magic Valley Mall, then running off with a pair of shoes.

The county has had as many as 22 kids in lockup around Idaho in recent months.

• Kids are no longer held in Twin Falls motel rooms because they escaped too often, putting themselves and the community at risk and exposing taxpayers to frightening liability. (What if the escapees had killed someone – by accident or on purpose?)

It is clear that the county needs more than its current eight beds to lock up tough kids.

State experts this year recommended that the county build an 18-bed lockup.

We're with the experts. No money can be saved by building a smaller lockup, as suggested by a citizens committee that looked into the issue.

For one thing, Twin Falls County could lose money it hopes to collect from other counties if it builds so small a lockup that neighboring counties can't use it.

Moreover, construction costs just keep rising. Interest rates won't stay low forever. If we delay, we could end up building a too-small lockup for even more money.

The experts say we need both an adequate facility for juvenile detention and an expansion of programs for kids who don't necessarily have to be locked up. If a smaller detention center is needed in the future, one wing of the 18-cell lockup could be converted to other juvenile-justice uses.

Unfortunately, the Magic Valley has offered so few alternatives to lockup, for so long, that we have plenty of kids in serious trouble now who need to be locked up.

We believe that building an 18-bed youth lockup will solve the crisis for many years to come. Failing to build it now will only extend the crisis.

We urge voters to approve the $800,000 bond issue Tuesday.

Bond deadline

Want to speak your mind on next week's Twin Falls County bond issue? We'd be happy to publish your letter – but time is running out.

We'll accept letters until noon Friday. Letters may be brought to our Twin Falls office, mailed to P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls, 83303, or sent by fax to (208)734-5538.

Heaven under the trees

If you need reminding about why you live in the Magic Valley instead of Detroit or Orange County, Thursday evenings in summertime should do the trick.

Come – pack up your picnic basket and follow us. The destination is Twin Falls City Park.

Here's a nice spot. Roll out the blanket under that tree. No mustard on ours, thanks. Did you remember the iced tea?

You won't see any muggers or crack heads. Just families eating cold fried chicken, and older folk with lawn chairs, staking out the choicest spots in front of the band shell.

If you finish your dinner a little early, stroll across the grass to the public library. It's open all evening. You can browse through the magazines or pick out a book to take home after the concert.

Then, at 8, settle into your seat to enjoy whatever treat the city band has been working on.

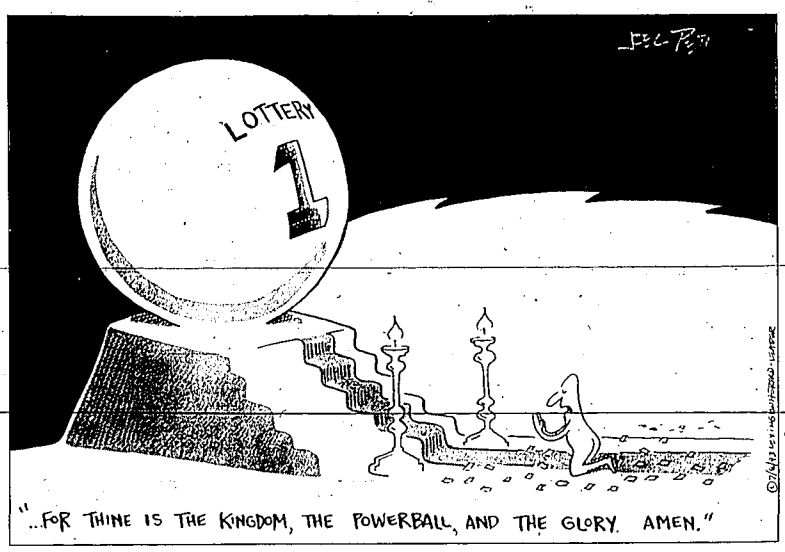

Maybe they're not the Boston Pops. But they put their hearts in it, and the price is right. And nobody throws you out for humming along.

Yeah, this is living. A picnic on the grass. Band music under a summer sky. Life is good hereabouts, but just a little too short.

Rights evolve into 'grassroots tyranny'

George F. Will

Imagine living in your own house in close confinement with hostile strangers who your state government prevents you from evicting. Imagine this for seven years.

Jetohl and Ellen Ziman and their two children did not imagine this nightmare, they lived it. Theirs is a cautionary story of a growing phenomenon – grassroots tyranny.

In February 1984, the Zimans purchased a townhouse in Manhattan's Greenwich Village, planning to restore it as a single-family home. The house had been configured for seven rental units, three of which were occupied and covered by the state's rent control law, an "emergency" and "temporary" program enacted during wartime, in 1943, and still on the books.

But in June 1984, New York changed the rent control rules, making it extremely difficult to evict anyone, and impossible to do so without years of expensive wandering in bureaucratic wastelands. So the Zimans camped for years in two rooms of "their" house, finding drug paraphernalia left by tenants or by those to whom the tenants gave keys to the house.

The government-dictated rent did not even cover the Zimans' maintenance expenses. They acquired full possession of their house only after rent control and $100,000 spent fighting it had reduced them to a "hardship" exemption from the restrictions on the right of owners to evict unwanted tenants.

Their case is an example of what is referred to in the title of Clint Bolick's new book, "Grassroots Tyranny." Bolick is a combative litigator determined to convince fellow conservatives that "conservative judicial activism" is neither an oxymoron nor a bad idea.

Conservatism, defining itself in reaction to the federal government's aggrandizement under the New Deal and Great Society, has often endorsed virtually unbounded powers for state and local governments, to counter centralization of power in Washington. But Bolick notes that "in today's society a zoning commissioner or a tax assessor can have far greater impact on personal liberty than the president."

America has more than 82,000 units of government – not even counting state and local regulatory boards – below the federal level. The federal government has "only" two million civilian employees; lower government has 500,000 elected officials and 13 million employees.

State and local governments, subservient to strong local interests, commit myriad injustices, such as ludicrous licensing requirements that restrict entry into professions, for the benefit of those already in the professions.

The framers of the Constitution would not be surprised about the many such outrages Bolick documents, or by the fact that today's gravest attacks on free speech occur in small communities susceptible to tyranny in a small sphere – on college campuses. The framers, acutely interested in the sociology of liberty, understood that small communities are particularly vulnerable to domination by overbearing majorities.

The framers also understood that stable, tyrannical majorities can best be prevented by the multiplication of minority interests, so the majority at any moment will be just a transitory coalition of minorities. Hence Madison favored an "extensive republic," and Jefferson made the Louisiana Purchase to guarantee a sphere sufficient for a healthy multiplicity of factions.

Federalism expresses a constitutional preference for decentralized power. However, Bolick, whose book is subtitled "The Limits of Federalism," argues that "the Framers were not concerned primarily with favoring one type of government over another, but with limiting the power of government, regardless of its source."

They had been appalled by the excesses of local majoritarianism, such as debt relief by the overturning of contracts, under the Articles of Confederation. They were sentimental about nothing, least of all the virtues of government below the federal level.

Too many conservatives, Bolick argues, dogmatically celebrate "states' rights" and local autonomy as ends in themselves, rather than as instrumental to the protection of individual liberty. Bolick is one of a cadre of conservatives eager for courts to use the Ninth Amendment ("The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people") as a context for construing the entire Constitution, and particularly to block state and local acts of majoritarian tyranny, violating economic liberty and property rights.

Today the Zimans are suing New York, arguing that the years during which they were denied enjoyment of their house constituted a "taking" of property for which the Fifth Amendment ("... nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation") requires restitution. They have joined the counterrevolution against infringements of economic liberty and abridgement of property rights – the crucial privacy rights – by local government leviathans.

And conservatives everywhere are rethinking the relative values of majoritarianism and individual liberty, federalism and judicial activism.

Don Edwards

The Supreme Court, dominated by anti-choice justices appointed by Presidents Reagan and Bush, ruled in 1992 that the constitutional right to have an abortion does not prohibit a state from requiring a 24-hour waiting period preceded by a state-imposed lecture by a physician called "informed consent."

The court rationalized its decision by asserting that such a requirement is not an "undue burden" on the woman and is "reasonable." Reasonable? Ask any woman who has faced this requirement:

She has found that the state law was designed to harass her into not getting an abortion, and that the experience was burdensome, expensive and humiliating.

She has found that the actual delay is much more than 24 hours, caused by any one of such factors as the unavailability of the physician, crowded clinic schedules, her inability to take additional time off from work, school or family.

She has found that the multiple clinic visits has enabled anti-choice protesters to record her license plate number, obtain her name and address and then harass her at home.

She has been told that a list of public mental health agencies is available "if and when postpartum psychological damage requires professional attention."

She has been given a brochure with full color-enlarged photos of fetuses similar to those seen on anti-abortionists' signs.

She may have driven six hours to reach the Law has dubious source

Many times we wonder what the Gun Control Act of 1968 really is? Where are the ideas coming from? Well, I would like to share with you that we Christians or National Rifle Association members have the right to know what the act is.

The Gun Control Act of 1968 was introduced from the Nazi Weapons Law and that meant gun registration, waiting periods, magazine capacity restrictions (10 ammo maximum), semi-automatic rifle bans, etc. I am surprised it comes from the Nazi Weapons Law.

I got a copy of a magazine, "Gun & Ammo," from May 1993 from a friend. It has documentary proof that Jews for the Preservation of Firearms Ownership know who implanted into American law cancerous ideas from the Nazi Weapons Law – former Sen. James J. Dodd (deceased). He had the original text of the Nazi Weapons Law in his possession four months before the bill that became the Gun Control Act of 1968 was law.

The Gun Control Act of 1968 can put your life at risk right now. You have a constitutional civil right to be armed in order to protect yourself and your family because under U.S. law, the police have no duty to protect the average person.

If you are ready to take action to wipe out gun control, you and I must call for a full investigation and the repeal of the Gun Control Act of 1968 – now! For more details, you can go to the library and read on page 30 of the May 1993 issue of "Gun & Ammo."

Please call U.S. Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., at 202-225-4071 or write to him in care of U.S. Representatives, Washington, DC 20515, and ask him to hold a hearing to repeal the Gun Control Act of 1968.

Kids deserve qualified officials

I am writing this letter to see if the city will respond to a question. Why are we letting the recreation department waste our money as taxpayers? For two years now, I have volunteered to umpire baseball and referee soccer. I have been certified in both sports, but for two years, the recreation department insists on paying people that do not know what they are doing. This is not only a waste of our tax dollars but also deprives our children of what they deserve.

By this, I mean that our children deserve the best that the city can give us; however, we are not getting this at this time. The recreation department does not seem to care whether our children get the best or not. They do not check to see if the people that they hire know anything at all about the game that they will be officiating.

In closing, I would like to say that I believe that I could do a better job running the recreation department on a part-time basis with no pay. I would also save the taxpayers of this city some money; however, the city probably doesn't care about taxpayers either.

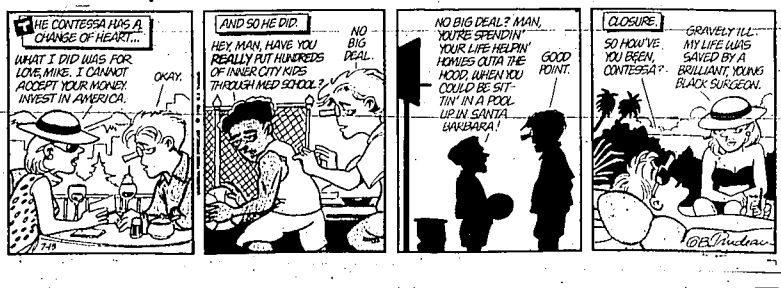

While I am writing this, I want to say this city is concerned about a gang problem. I would be concerned, too, if the city always let the schools water the grass during the day. That is the time that children get together to play ball or tag or just have a good time, and if they can't get to a school because of watering, then they end up forming gangs and doing something else.

I invite the city to respond to me in person and anyone else who may be concerned about either issue, pro or con. My number's in the book. Thanks for reading.

Let's clarify bond article

I would like to commend Drew DeSilver for his July 9 article on the Murtaugh bond issue. It is the first article reported by The Times-News not blatantly bent toward opposition to the bond. I would, however, like clarification on two matters.

My first question is, "Who is Ana Nail?" I taught in Murtaugh from 1987 to 1993 and never worked with, heard from or heard of Ana Nail. I can find no record of her being employed as a certified teacher in the Murtaugh School District. Yet, The Times-News quotes her as if she is an authority on educational systems, specifically District 418. Come on, Times-News, opposition or otherwise, let us hear from someone else.

Second: This bond was about buildings and money. Despite the bond's failure, Murtaugh students will still have above-average standardized test scores, graduate from high school at a rate that exceeds state and national norms and be accepted at major colleges and universities. The staff, administration and patrons of Murtaugh School District have not and will not accept anything less.

This leads to my second question, a rhetorical one, asked of the patrons who opposed the bond in the interest of quality education. "Is the quality of education in your community only an issue at election time?" If not, then why does the voice of discontentment roar only when attached to the pocketbook?

I would like to close with this comment. You can have the best buildings money can buy, the best teachers the world has to offer and the choice of any course your heart desires; yet if what you invest of yourself is minimal, your return will be likewise.

Bond should be defeated

In February of this year, Twin Falls County attempted to bypass the Idaho State Constitution by filing a petition in District Court that would allow the county to borrow $650,000 directly from a bank to build an 18-bed youth detention facility.

The $650,000 was to be added to a $750,000 state grant for a total of $1,400,000. A group of concerned citizens, at their own expense, filed an answer to the petition asking the court to disallow the petition and grant the citizens' motion to dismiss the petition. The court did grant the motion to dismiss; that in effect required the county to call for a bond election to be approved by two-thirds of the persons voting (as required by the state constitution).

On July 20, you will have an opportunity to vote on the issue. You will also find that the $650,000 amount has been increased to $800,000, a $150,000 bump.

There are three strong and compelling reasons why the bond election should be defeated:

- The site proposed by the county is in the wrong place. It's in an industrial zone next to bean processing plants, meat processing plants, railroad tracks, potato processing plants – all of which cause dust, noise, traffic impact and odors not compatible with a youth detention center. In addition, construction in an industrial zone would effectively stop other industrial development in the area for concerns of lawsuits and objections from Health and Welfare and the Environmental Protection Agency.
- The county already owns a one-half block of vacant land directly adjacent to the county courthouse that is ideally located for ready access to the magistrate's court, prosecutor's office and the county sheriff's department, thereby eliminating travel costs for transporting juvenile offenders 5.6 miles round trip between the industrial zone site and the courthouse. Meals can be provided from the county jail kitchen to avoid carrying meals back and forth three times a day.
- The American Correctional Institute recommends youth detention centers be located as close as possible to the county courthouse. Pocatello's new 12-bed facility is located next to the Bannock County Courthouse.

From the standpoint of location alone, the July 20 bond election should be defeated.

Residents deserve respect

I am writing on behalf of the residents and staff at Mountain View Care Center in Kimberly. I don't know what the problem is with you people, but it's my opinion that The Times-News is very negative toward Mountain View.

The entire Magic Valley is aware of all the problems our facility has faced in the past 12 to 18 months because you people keep it in the headlines for days. But when we accomplish something good for the facility and in the community, you go out of your way to delete us from your news reporting.

July 10 was Good Neighbor Day in Kimberly, and our facility participated as usual. Our float won third place in the parade. But in your news reporting, you listed first and second place winners and conveniently left us out at third place. We are all quite proud of winning third place.

It would be different if this only affected the staff here, but you are treating our residents unfairly. They are people who helped settle this valley. Some of them were here before you people at The Times-News were ever born. Our residents deserve better.

Not only did our float win third place, one of our residents on the float was recognized for being the oldest person in the parade; she's 102 years old. Now it seems to me that that would be something worth mentioning. But in your reporting, it seemed to have gotten left out.

We work hard here to give our residents the kind of home they deserve, to keep them active and to give them the love they deserve. We are part of their family. For some of them, we are the only family they have. And we tend to become very upset when we feel our residents have been slighted, which is what you have done to them.

We want the community to know that good things and fun things also happen at Mountain View. I feel that whoever the reporter was that did the article on Good Neighbor Day owes the residents of Mountain View Care Center an apology.

I think it's time that you quit being so narrow-minded. If you are going to report the news, be fair about it. One of these days, The Times-News may not be the only daily paper in Twin Falls. If that ever happened, I don't think you could take the competition. And, one of these days, God forbid, some of you may be residents here or in facilities like this.

clinic, been forced to spend the night, or perhaps nights, in a motel.

The Supreme Court has stopped short of allowing states to prohibit abortions. Today, a woman has the right to have an abortion but not to freely enter a clinic to have one. She can make the decision to go ahead but only after the state has made cruel efforts to dissuade her.

The Freedom of Choice Act, which comes up for consideration in the next few weeks, will not prevent the harassment and violence by anti-abortion fanatics outside clinics. What the legislation can do is prevent states from aiding this harassment and extending it inside the clinics.

Democrats vow to unite behind tax cut bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic leaders predicted Wednesday that party members would solve their differences and quickly send a compromise deficit reduction tax bill to President Clinton.

"Almost every member of the Democratic Party believes we must pass" the deficit-reduction bill, Rep. Steny Hoyer, D-Md., told reporters. "There is no optional bill."

House and Senate negotiators planned to begin meeting Thursday in an effort to write a compromise measure and send it to Clinton for his signature by early August.

Both chambers have approved measures that Democrats say would lead to about $500 billion in lowered budget deficits over the next five years. Their chief differences are over how energy would be taxed, the amount of cuts in Medicare, and how generous tax breaks for many businesses should be.

Republicans have unanimously opposed the measure, saying it lacks sufficient spending cuts and contains tax increases that would hurt business and the middle class. Not one GOP lawmaker voted "yes" when the House approved its bill by six votes in May, or when Vice President Al Gore broke a tie vote to pass the Senate version in June.

That has left passage of the measure up to Democrats, who say they know the consequences of failure.

"If it fails, the government's over. We know that," said Rep. Louise Slaughter, D-N.Y., referring to the administration's chances for success in the future.

House Democrats met privately to discuss the legislation and heard "a variety of opinions, a variety of venting out," said Rep. Bill Richardson, D-N.M., a Democratic vote counter.

A coalition of conservatives and liberals, led by Reps. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas, and David Obey, D-Wis., have continued trying to persuade party leaders to replace the measures' taxes on energy and gasoline with higher levies on the rich and businesses.

Judiciary panel rejects probe of travel firings

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Judiciary Committee dealt a setback Wednesday to Republicans seeking an inquiry into the firing of seven White House travel office employees.

Majority Democrats, on a 20-15 vote, sent the inquiry proposal to the full House with a recommendation that it be defeated. Only Democratic Rep. Romano L. Mazzoli, D-Ky., broke party ranks and voted with Republicans against the negative recommendation.

Democrats argued the Justice Department and Congress' General Accounting Office already were conducting investigations and there was no need for another inquiry unless those proved unsatisfactory.

The chief sponsor of the inquiry, Rep. Henry J. Hyde, R-Ill., told the committee that a White House investigation into the travel office was inadequate and more needs to be done.

Hyde can ask the full House to consider the inquiry, although Democrats probably would move to table it, or lay the resolution aside.

The GOP plan would request President Clinton to turn over documents related to 26 occurrences and decisions made by the White House in the travel office controversy.

The White House internal report was released July 2, concluding the administration erred in firing the employees and urging the FBI to investigate them.

Four staff members were reprimanded for their handling of the matter, but none was fired.

The White House has said five of the seven fired travel office workers would be offered new jobs in the government.

The internal White House report also maintained the travel unit engaged in "seriously deficient" bookkeeping.

County grants extra time for permits

BURLEY – Dispose-All Inc. has until July 26 to apply for permits to run a landfill in Cassia County.

County Prosecuting Attorney Steve Bywater wrote Dispose-All President Doug Lomow before the Fourth of July weekend giving him 10 days to apply for a permit.

Because of the long weekend, the letter apparently was delayed in getting to Lomow, so at the request of Lomow's attorney, the county granted more time.

But Bywater said Wednesday that when the Cassia County Commission meets on July 26, the company must apply for a permit. If the county does not receive a permit application, it will file suit, he said.

Lomow plans to build a landfill on Burley Butte in west Cassia County and has started preliminary work on the facility. County officials say that under new zoning rules, he will need a special-use permit as well as a solid-waste facility permit.

IHA loans are available on a first-come, first-served basis to low and modern income Idaho residents on homes costing up to $99,000.

In addition to the single-family mortgage loan program, IHA administers federal rental assistance programs under contract with the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development in those areas that are not served by local housing authorities.

Twin Falls man hospitalized after being hit by stray BB

Neil Morrison apparently was hit while three youths were shooting at cans in a ditch near 572 Madrona St., Twin Falls police said. A BB ricocheted off one of the cans and struck Morrison.

Police said the BB remained lodged in Morrison's wrist. Morrison was then taken to Twin Falls Clinic to have his wrist X-rayed.

One of the youths was arrested and charged with discharging a firearm in city limits. He was released to his father. Police said the youth may have to perform some community service.

Farm Bureau sues over snail listing

By N.S. Nokkentved
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – An Idaho farm advocacy group Wednesday filed suit in federal court over the listing of five Snake River snails as threatened or endangered.

The Idaho Farm Bureau Federation's suit charges that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's evidence does not support the endangered listing of four snails and the threatened listing of a fifth.

The bureau's Rayola Jacobsen said the Farm Bureau has scientific research to prove that "there are large numbers" of the snails in the river and that they are not endangered.

The research was done by Richard Konopacky, a freshwater biologist hired by Farm Bureau, and was submitted to Fish and Wildlife in 1990, before the listing. The bureau has "nothing new," Jacobsen said.

The Fish and Wildlife Service late last year listed the Idaho Spring snail, Snake River Physa snail, Utah Valvata snail and the Banbury Springs limpet as endangered, and the Bliss Rapids snail as threatened.

The five species are restricted to a few isolated free-flowing reaches or spring alcoves in the middle Snake River that feature cold, well-oxygenated, unpolluted water.

The four snails and one limpet have been affected by and are vulnerable to changes in their habitat and water quality from hydroelectric development, existing hydroelectric operations, water diversions, water pollution and inadequate regulatory mechanisms, the service said.

The bureau in the past has charged that Fish and Wildlife ignored Konopacky's studies when it issued the listing.

But Fish and Wildlife Boise field officer director Chuck Lobdell said Konopacky's work led to the Bliss Rapids snail listing being downgraded to threatened.

Since it issued the listing, Fish and Wildlife has required additional sampling in possible snail habitat, but no additional snails have turned up, he said. In the five-mile stretch of river from Auger Falls downstream, no live snails were found in about 200 samples, Lobdell said.

So far the listing has had little apparent effect on the Magic Valley – construction on a Rupert bridge replacement was delayed a few months and the use of some pesticides and other agricultural chemicals may be affected.

Charles Comer Jr., farmer and board member of the Twin Falls Canal Co., said area farmers and canal companies already are hard at work to clean up pollution in irrigation runoff.

City employees want 100% health coverage

By Phil Sahm
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Health insurance premiums for city employees were projected to rise 20 percent this coming year, but went up only 15 percent.

With the cost savings, employees say now is the time for the city to fully fund employees' premiums and to start paying again for spouse and dependent health insurance.

This would add more than $111,000 to the city's yearly health insurance premiums, bringing the total to more than $680,000, according to the city's employee committee.

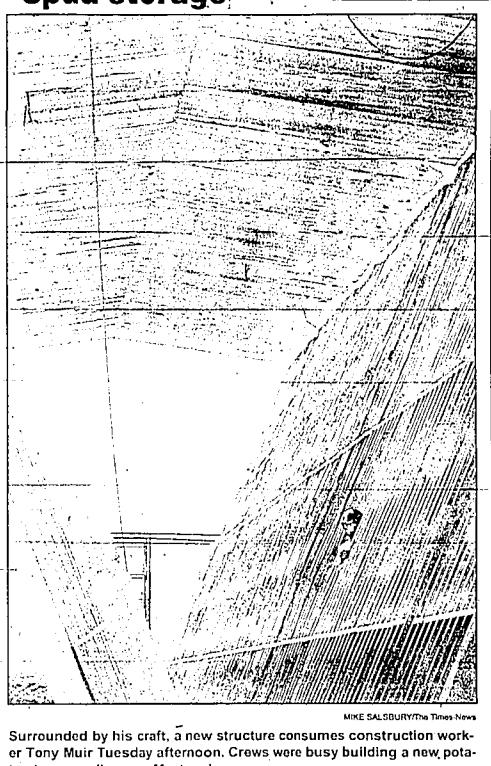

"We feel this is a perfect time to resume 100 percent coverage," Cpl. Mike Hottman of the Twin Falls Police Department told the City Council this week.

Before October 1991, if an employee and his or her spouse passed a physical examination, the city paid the health insurance premiums for the employee and family.

To stem rising insurance costs, the City Council changed the policy so that since October 1991 the city has paid only part of the premium for employees and excluded families. But this policy penalizes new employees, who generally earn less than more experienced workers, said Hottman, who is chairman of the employee committee.

Murtaugh board considers options after bond failure

Mychel Matthews Goodman
Times-News correspondent

MURTAUGH – Murtaugh School Superintendent Mike Chesley said Wednesday that the board plans to discuss its options after the district lost a $2.18 million bond issue to rebuild.

The board "needs to take a deep breath and to let things settle down" in the aftermath of Tuesday's disappointing defeat of the polls, Chesley said. The final vote tally fell 48 ballots short of approval.

Meanwhile, persons who favor consolidation with Hansen School District are marshaling their forces. A pro-consolidation group sent out a flier prior to the election, promoting its cause.

The group, which is as yet unnamed, is preparing a petition drive to initiate consolidation.

To do so, the group needs about 50 names on the petition or 15 percent of the voters who cast ballots in the last three trustee elections.

Once the required number of signatures are obtained in both Hansen and Murtaugh districts and the petitions presented to the boards, trustees have three months in which to submit a consolidation plan to the State Board of Education, according to Idaho Code.

It will still take a 51 percent voter approval in both districts to consolidate Hansen and Murtaugh districts and 67 percent approval to build a Murtaugh-Hansen consolidated high school.

Although neighboring districts have shown interest in consolidation in the past, Hansen school officials and board members have recently declined to take a pro-consolidation stand publicly, until after Murtaugh's election, for fear of influencing the vote, according to School Board member Terry Hollifield and Superintendent Richard Smith.

Hansen School Board Chairman Jeanne Gibson said Wednesday, "It would be great if we could work together" toward consolidation.

She added she plans to bring it up at the Hansen's board meeting also set for Monday night.

Magic Valley Catholics head to Denver to see pope

By Analise Taylor
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Next month, Catholics will rush to Denver from all parts of the world like bees to honey to see Pope John Paul II.

The event is World Youth Day, celebrated every year, said Cheryl McCrorie, secretary of the Education Ministries of the Catholic Diocese of Boise.

The pope travels to a different continent every two years to visit and celebrate with youth from all over the world, she said. His destination in 1991 was Poland.

World Youth Day is scheduled for Aug. 11-15. Over 400 Idahoans are expected to attend, McCrorie said, 48 from Hailey, Rupert, Jerome and Buhl.

"There are 46 people going from Twin Falls, and it has the largest number going as far as parish size," she said.

David Massie, 16, of Twin Falls, has a question to ask the pope, if given the chance.

"I would ask him why priests can't be married and why other men in other churches can be married," he said.

Massie is also excited to see people from other nations and experience other cultures.

"All we see are local and statewide Catholics," he said.

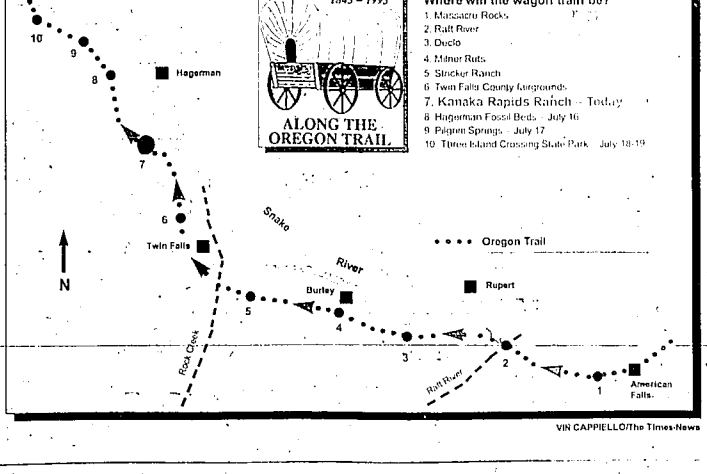

Said Jeremy Miciak, 16: "I would ask the pope why women are not allowed to be priests and are not allowed to hold the same positions as men. I guess I'm more liberal about those kinds of things. I'm not going to judge anybody."

Two rallies are planned for Aug. 9 in

City Council grants variance

Developers will build 2 duplexes in Buhl

By Bertilia L. Redfern
Times-News correspondent

BUHL – City Council members granted a variance to allow development of Triangle Subdivision on Monday.

Mayor Ted Pence told council members that Linda Nolevanko had written a letter with 10 signatures from concerned residents, requesting certain stipulations be made in the variance is granted. Meanwhile, he said, J-U-B Engineers of Twin Falls had written a letter supporting the variance.

The original request addressed the street width, cul-de-sac diameter, paving of streets and curbs and gutters. But council members only addressed the first two issues.

Councilwoman Maria Maier said the other issues could be dealt with at a later date, when the developer presents the preliminary plat for the development. At that point, the city can enter into a site development agreement with the developer and alleviate some of the concerns of citizens living near the development.

In other business:

• A recommendation to increase fees under the jurisdiction of Planning and Zoning was presented to council members. Building fees and those for permits haven't been increased in Buhl since 1981. Council members did not make a decision.

Councilman Tom Tappen said he was concerned that increasing fees could be perceived as anti-growth. He said the fees won't generate much income anyway and that increasing them dramatically would generate very little revenue.

Councilman Chuck Geska said he could understand increasing the fees dramatically but only if a building boom was taking place. He recommended the issue be tabled until council members had more time to study the facts.

• Jim Barker, the developer of the proposed Courtyard Subdivision, told council members he has filed an appeal with district court over a recent decision to deny approval of his preliminary plat for the subdivision.

Barker said he is willing to do whatever it takes to resolve the impasse, and said his attorney has told him he will prevail. He offered to meet with council members at any time and said he would stop proceedings immediately if a resolution could be reached.

Northside gets $55,000 to fight drugs

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

Four Northside counties have been awarded $55,000 to help battle drug dealers.

Lincoln, Camas, Jerome and Gooding counties will use the money to set up a Northside Drug Task Force, Camas County Sheriff Harold Lee said.

The money comes from the federal government but is doled out each year by the Idaho Criminal Justice Council.

The grant will diminish over the next four years, with the task force expected to be self supporting by the fifth year, Lee said.

The concept of a Northside task force has been around since February 1992 when then-Sheriff Larry Gold of Jerome County pulled out of the Magic Valley Drug Task Force.

Gold said then that the effort invested by his county in the task force was wasted because the bulk of the task force investigations were done in Twin Falls and Cassia counties.

Twin Falls, Cassia and Minidoka counties have since formed the Tri-County Drug Task Force, leaving other counties north of the Snake River largely on their own when it comes to narcotics investigations.

Blaine County has its own drug task force.

Although the Northside Task Force asked for $66,000, Lee said he is happy with the grant and added that it will be put to good use.

The drug problem in sparsely-populated counties such as his gets worse each day, he said.

The large areas of public land, and the wide-open spaces make rural counties prime targets for drug dealers and marijuana growers who know that law enforcement agencies are stretched to the limit, he said.

Lee said the money may be used to hire a special agent to work drug cases in the county. Cash also is needed to rent office space, pay for equipment and every-day expenses such as telephone and electrical costs, he said.

The grant begins Aug. 1. The counties must reapply to the Criminal Justice Council each year for continued grant money.

Perot won't discuss Weaver case in Idaho

BOISE (AP) – When Ross Perot comes to Idaho on Saturday, one thing he won't be talking about is the trial of white separatists Randy Weaver and Kevin Harris.

Perot hooked up in a teleconference with Western reporters Wednesday. He's scheduled to make an appearance at Boise State University's Pavilion on Saturday.

An Idaho reporter asked him if he thought federal authorities used excessive force in a northern Idaho shootout and standoff that resulted in three deaths and a long, costly trial.

Perot said he didn't know enough about the event to comment on it.

"It's easy to sit at a safe distance and speculate," he said. "Before I answer that, I really would have to have more facts."

He fielded questions about President Clinton, the federal budget, Congress and his political plans.

But he used his sharpest criticism for federal policies that allow raw timber to be exported from the Pacific Northwest and processed into paper in Japan and transported back to this country.

He said we should do the processing and send paper to Japan.

"I'm going to be grinning when we are shipping paper to Japan instead of having Japan shipping it to us," Perot said.

Association opposes water testing rules

By Margaret Jones
Times-News correspondent

HANSEN – Mayor George Urie reported during Monday night's council meeting that the Association of Idaho Cities passed a resolution opposing the Department of Environmental Quality water testing regulations.

Under the current ruling, the city of Hansen would be assessed annually a $4 per household fee for water testing. In addition, Hansen has to pay $2,000 for each water source three wells in Hansen's case. This charge could be assessed every three years or as often as one year, depending on DEQ.

Jim Corle, representing the Assembly of God Church, asked the council about its findings pertaining to the church's zoning setback problem. Urie advised Corle that the church's problem could be solved by asking the zoning board for a variance on the setback.

It was reported to the council that children were tampering with sprinklers in the Rolling Hills Park, which is causing a pool of water deep enough for small children to drown in. Urie said he would check on the problem.

Jeff Miller, Hansen's new police officer, reported an estimated 75 percent of the dog owners had been contacted for dog licenses. He expected the rest of the town canvassed within the next few days.

Urie said the budget will be discussed at the 8 p.m. Aug. 9 meeting.

City

"A plan like this makes two classes of employees. ... Insurance is more than a cost benefit. It's a peace-of-mind benefit," he said.

Other Idaho cities, in varying degrees, pay for employees' and families' insurance.

Lewiston, for example, requires a $30 copayment, but covers the workers and their families, according to figures gathered by the employee committee.

Councilman Jim Vickers wondered if Twin Falls' workers would accept a "small" copayment for a return to covering employees and their families.

Hottman did not know how employees would feel about this and suggested that workers in all departments can be surveyed. City Manager Tom Courtney said meetings can be scheduled to speed up the surveys.

The council is preparing the city budget for the 1993-94 fiscal year and the health insurance package is part of the employees' compensation package.

The preliminary budget includes 2.5 to 3 percent cost-of-living increases and "eligible" workers would receive merit increases of 2 percent.

Hottman said the proposed wage increase – a total of 5 percent – was fair.

TWIN FALLS – Marilee E. Hobbs, 36, of Twin Falls, went to be with her Lord on July 12, 1993.

She was born March 23, 1957, in Nampa, the daughter of Delbert and Eloise Jacklin. In 1960, she moved with her parents to Twin Falls. Snails management plan for the Middle Snake River, may improve water quality in the river enough that the effect of the listing will be minimal.

But the Farm Bureau is concerned about adverse effects on industries, towns and cities and agriculture, Jacobsen said.

The bureau would like to do additional studies this fall to look for the snails outside their current known range. Existing studies have examined only about 1 percent of the potential snail habitat in the river, and some snails have been found in the river above Idaho Falls, Jacobsen said.

But a review of existing research last year called the possibility of finding more snails unlikely.

"The possibility of populations increasing or of additional discoveries of these (mollusks) in poorly (sampled) or unsampled habitats of the Snake River is remote considering the rapid habitat deterioration," wrote C. Michael Falter, of the University of Idaho Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources.

Falter's report is the summary of a panel of biologists who reviewed technical information on the status of the rare snails.

Farm Bureau in May filed a federal lawsuit against the listing of the Bruneau Hot Springs snail as endangered.

Boise before the Denver event.

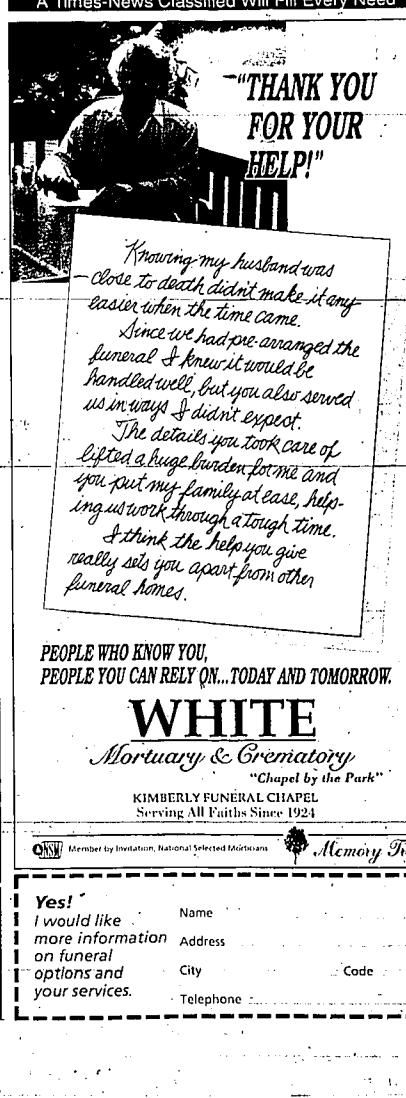

"Boise is designated as a hub city," McCrorie said. "Two thousand six hundred ninety-five people are coming from Oregon, Washington, British Columbia, Idaho and Alberta."

An "Idaho rally" is planned for 2 p.m. at Bishop Kelly High School and the "Hub City rally" is scheduled for 7 p.m. at Boise Hawk Stadium.

The pope is planning to arrive Aug. 12, when a celebration will be held at Mile High Stadium in Denver.

"It will broaden our horizons and help us experience culture from around the country and around the world," Miciak said.

New school official brings experience to Minidoka

By John J. Harberth
Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT – The new Minidoka County School District assistant superintendent Richard Goodworth is bringing more than 20 years of experience to his new job.

Goodworth, who replaced Bert Nixon, served as superintendent of schools for 22 years in Colorado, Utah and Idaho. For the past 10 years, he was superintendent in the Bonneville District in Idaho Falls.

As assistant superintendent one of his duties will managing the district's financial accounting. Goodworth said he would like to save the district some money and organize the system to flow a little more smoothly.

"My expertise lies in school law, finance and facilities," said Goodworth, who supervised the building of five schools and additions to two others during his tenure at Bonneville.

He has his doctorate in educational administration from Utah State University.

Goodworth will also oversee Minico High School, the Mini-Cassia Opportunity Center, the district's drug and alcohol program, school lunches and maintenance.

As an assistant, he said, he won't be dealing with as many issues as he did as superintendent.

As for any changes, "I think it's a little too early to outline specific things," said Goodworth, who has been on the job only nine days.

"I want the very best for the students," he added.

Goodworth said he plans to take a good look at some of the district's programs to find out what is offered, what could be expanded or has outlived its usefulness.

Goodworth, who wrote the school policy for his last district, said he was unsure if he would implement the same policy at Minidoka.

"I think every school system is unique and every board of trustees has their own goals," and using an existing policy from another district doesn't always work, he said.

"There may some ideas can use, but it would be foolish to have to reinvent the wheel every time," he added

Before becoming superintendent he was a science teacher for three years at the junior and high school levels. His wife teaches home economics at Burley Junior High. He said his years of teaching have given him experience working with different age groups.

Despite his love for teaching, he always wanted to be involved in school administration.

He said his first few weeks on the job will be spent getting settled and meeting people.

Rupert garage, house spray-painted

RUPERT – A Rupert woman reported Wednesday morning that someone vandalized her garage and house with spray paint.

Ann Taylor discovered the paint on her garage door, side wall and front screen at her house on "J" Street shortly after 2 a.m., according to the Rupert Police Department.

Taylor told police she saw three youths running away from her house at the time of the incident.

Police also discovered a window that had been shot twice with a BB-gun. The damage was estimated at $300.

Window broken on van in Burley

Clyde Bishop told deputies that during the night the side window was broken out, according to the Cassia County Sheriff's Department.

Bishop said he didn't notice anything at first until he closed the door and heard glass breaking, deputies said.

The loss was estimated at $150.

Police find stolen van; man arrested

RUPERT – Police recovered a van that was reported stolen and arrested the man driving it Tuesday.

Police spotted the 1985 Ford Aerostar van parked on "E" street at 12:20 p.m., according to the Rupert Police Department.

While the van was under surveillance, Paul Valdez, 25, of Rupert, got in and drove off, police said.

Valdez was stopped and arrested for possession of stolen property.

He told officers that he had harrowed the van from his sister-in-law's husband, who owns the van.

The van, valued at $11,000, was reported stolen in Illinois.

News Journal shuts down after 5 years

The Times-News

RUPERT – The News Journal ceased publication Wednesday after publishing in the Mini-Cassia area for five years.

Publisher Douglas S. Jones said inadequate support from local advertisers was the main reason he decided to close the paper, which delivered 14,584 copies free each week to every household in Minidoka and Cassia counties.

"The reality is that people in the Mini-Cassia area were not supportive of a locally owned newspaper," he said.

The News Journal's main competitor, the South Idaho Press of Burley, is owned by Park Communications of Ithaca, N.Y.

"The advertisers needed to support it, and the readers needed to tell the advertisers that they wanted to keep it coming," he said.

For the last year or so, the staff of The News Journal has also provided coverage for The Times-News under the name Mini-Cassia News Service. Jones said he was negotiating with The Times-News to continue that service.

Times-News Managing Editor Clark Walworth said the Twin Falls-based paper was "reviewing its options" on how to cover Minidoka and Cassia counties.

"We continue to have a commitment to covering the news in the Mini-Cassia area and throughout the Magic Valley," Walworth said. "One way or another, we're going to provide our readers with a quality news report."

County officials conduct drill

By John J. Harberth
Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT – Everyone showed up except for the tornado.

That's because it was only a drill.

Local officials from Rupert and Minidoka County held a mock tornado drill Wednesday to prepare in the event of a disaster.

Mike Sweeney, who works at the central field office for the Idaho Bureau of Disaster Services conducted the drill with the George Falkner, the county disaster services coordinator.

The drills, which simulate a tornado or similar disaster striking the area, must be conducted once a year, said Sweeney, who oversees 12 counties.

Sweeney said Idaho averages about eight or nine tornados a year.

While tornados in Idaho may not pack the same punch as those in the Midwest, "all it takes is one in the wrong place at the wrong time," he said.

The purpose of the drill is to coordinate rescue and relief efforts and educate officials as to what they must do.

"Training prevents panic," Rupert Fire Chief Thayne Taylor said.

He said without a quick response there is a high potential for death.

The unannounced drill began at 9:38 a.m. when the tornado warning siren was activated.

The siren brought many city and county officials to the Emergency Operations Center (EOC), situated in the law enforcement building.

The fire department also has a mobile command post, which would serve as the EOC if the law enforcement center was evacuated.

The messages included everything from reports of downed power lines, a missing fishing boat and questions by the media.

Once received, the department head responsible was questioned as to the proper response and action needed to be taken.

Falkner said in an actual emergency the messages would be flooding the dispatcher.

Damage included a school collapsing, an ammonia leak at the Simplot plant and a tanker carrying hazardous material overturning on the interstate.

The hazardous waste aspect was added because many local companies work with hazardous material and it is transported through the region.

Sweeney was happy with the results of the drill and the turn out by officials.

He said the cooperation between the two counties gives the area almost double the assets. He also expressed hope that other communities wouldn't let jurisdictional boundaries get in the way of relief efforts.

Drug awareness tourney awards bowlers

Mini-Cassia News Service

RUPERT – Awards were handed out Wednesday to several bowlers who took part in a drug awareness bowling tournament at Rupert Bowl recently.

This was the fourth year for the event, according to Wally Studer, owner of Rupert Bowl.

The competition, which was held in April, had an adult and junior division. A total of eight teams and 40 people took part, Studer said.

Traveling trophies were awarded to the teams from Magic Valley Foods and Riverside Dairy, which sponsored a junior team.

Teams bowled a total of 10 games each with members bowling two frames per game.

"This helps equalize things a little bit," he said.

Winners were determined from total points.

The money from the event went to Parent And Youth Against Drug Abuse, which co-sponsored the event with the Burley Area Merchants Association.

Studer said $400 was raised this year.

Jerome officials expect financial help from state

By H.R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME – School officials are planning on receiving a windfall this August funds made available from increased state revenue.

"If the state distributes the whole $5 million we could get about $61,000," Superintendent Jim Cobble said.

Proceeds from the lottery are at $7 million, "up from $6.5 million" Cobble said. This increase is expected to be distributed to school districts around the state, and Jerome could get as much as $86,487. The district budgeted for an expected $75,000.

Use of the additional funds will be designated toward such items as renovation, remodeling buildings, computers, desks and some equipment, Mike Gibson, business manager, said.

"Even though its one-time money, everything helps. Only we'll start next year without it, and it will be the same as this year. We'll start out short some."

Also at the meeting, Connie Bernsen was sworn in to replace Ben Neff, who quit his post.

During the school board meeting, Nancy Churchman was re-elected as chairwoman, and Robert Bingham as vice-chairman.

Gibson was appointed as clerk and treasurer for the district. Linda Adams will serve as deputy clerk. All principals, Karen Fraley, Karen Hulsey and Barbara O'Rouke were appointed as deputy treasurers. Robert Williams III will serve as school attorney.

In other business, the school board:

• Approved a request from Middle School teachers Gayla Otto and Lorna Pringle to take 125 eighth grade students on a camp-out along the Oregon Trail. About 25 adults would accompany the students, Otto said.

• Heard a report from Cobble that the district was looking for teachers in the high school science and English/drama classes and a half-time school psychologist.

• Approved the following student teachers for the spring of 1994: Gary Moon, Sheryl Gibbons, Cheryl Hansing, Betty Hockenberry and Debbie Hargrave.

• Approved new contracts for Diane Calbo, Josie Gott and Iris Hawkins to teach in the elementary schools; Roxanne Ottman, Susan Quesnell, Duane Waber and Mechelle Wood to teach in the Middle School; Karen Jansen, Gonzalo Jaramillo and Robert Miller as high school teachers and Ruth Ann Dewey to teach kindergarten on a half-time basis.

• Decided to research the possibilities of extending class hours to make more electives available.

• Changed the monthly meeting date to the second Tuesday of each month. The board decided to meet at the Middle School library on a regular basis, instead of in various schools where the acoustics were not acceptable.

Lawmakers sink higher fees

States News Service

WASHINGTON – Western Democratic congressmen turned some parliamentary cranks during a House floor debate on a $13 billion Interior Department spending bill and wiped out the provision that would have increased the grazing fee by a third.

Reps. Larry LaRocco, D-Idaho, and Pat Williams, D-Mont., both complained the hike should not be hidden in a big-money bill, because the issue requires more open debate. The provision LaRocco fought on Wednesday would have raised the fee from its current price, $1.86 per animal unit month, to a $2.48 level. An animal unit month is the amount of forage needed to feed one cow and her calf for one month.

"The elements of a new grazing policy are far more complicated than simply raising fees as proposed in this language," LaRocco said in a statement. He chided the appropriations committee for not recognizing progress Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt has made bringing ranchers and environmentalists together.

"The appropriations committee has for years tried to slam dunk an increase in grazing fees," Williams said. "But I feel that it bypasses the normal legislative process."

Williams won most supporters by arguing that such a hike would jolt cattle ranchers who have agreed to negotiate federal rangeland reform, he said.

Salmon recovery plan alarms Webb

LEWISTON — Idaho member Jay Webb is alarmed that the public seems more concerned about the Northwest Power Planning Council's salmon recovery efforts than what can be done to improve resident fisheries.

"I shouldn't be surprised but I am upset the public doesn't jump right into the middle of these things," he said Tuesday at a public hearing on the needs of fish that do not migrate to the Pacific Ocean.

About 20 people attended the hearing, but only four testified before Webb and fellow Idaho council member Robert Saxvik and their comments focused mostly on unrelated issues.

The Northwest Power Planning Council is in the process of mapping out changes to its fish and wildlife plan for the next decade covering the habitat needs of kokanee, sturgeon, bull trout and other resident species.

School support meeting set Friday

BOISE — A working group set up by state leaders to seek a solution to a potentially costly lawsuit over school funding will meet Friday afternoon in Boise.

One of the officials who helped create it, Jerry Evans, state superintendent of public instruction, said Wednesday the goal is to settle the lawsuit without a long legal battle.

"I'm committed to giving it a try," Evans told a school meeting. "We're making every possible effort to resolve it outside the courts."

Nearly 50 school districts have joined in a lawsuit before 4th District Judge Gerald Schroeder over state support for public schools. The Supreme Court in January ruled that the suit could proceed on the issue of whether public school are meeting the Idaho Constitution's requirement for a "thorough" system of education.

Resort pays for asbestos demolition

COEUR d'ALENE — The company that owns the Coeur d'Alene Resort has agreed to pay a $48,000 penalty to settle a complaint about mishandling of asbestos during demolition of a building in 1990, an Environmental Protection Agency official said Wednesday.

Terms of the settlement between the U.S. Department of Justice and Hagadone Hospitality Co. were contained in a consent decree filed Tuesday in U.S. District Court in Boise, said Bob Jacobson of the EPA's regional office in Seattle.

The complaint alleges Hagadone Hospitality was responsible for the actions of a salvage contractor that failed to comply with Clean Air Act regulations involving asbestos prior to demolition of the former J.C. Penney building adjacent to the resort.

Abduction causes nightmares in Pocatello

POCATELLO (AP) — Some Pocatello children are suffering nightmares after the abduction and slaying of an 11-year-old newspaper carrier, a psychologist says.

Sharon Katz conducted a class Tuesday to cope with those problems and said it's important for parents to answer as many questions as possible about the slaying of Jeralee Underwood — if the children ask about it.

The girl was snatched off a Pocatello street June 29 as she collected from customers on her Idaho State Journal route. Her body was found eight days later, one day after James Edward Wood, 45, Pocatello, was arrested.

Wood is being held in the Bannock County Jail without bond pending preliminary hearings for murder, kidnapping, rape, robbery and other charges. Police say officials in other states are investigating Wood, although he hasn't been charged with anything outside Idaho.

Katz spoke Tuesday to a meeting sponsored by the grief support groups Compassionate Friends and Parents of Murdered Children. She said she has received several calls from parents saying their children were suffering from nightmares.

"If you need to lie down with them until they go to sleep, it's OK to do that," she said.

Children should get "simple, concrete information" to their questions about Jeralee's death, "even if it's hard to say."

Children also should be allowed to express their feelings. Katz said the tragedy has affected the entire community, and children are likely to hear about Jeralee's slaying from friends even if parents try to shield them from the information.

"It's so horrifying we can't really believe it ... we've all lost, all been violated," she said.

"We need to model appropriate behavior for our children — if you act like everything's fine, you're not doing anyone any favors," she said.

But children shouldn't be forced to talk about the incident if they don't want to, Katz said, and acting out anger about the slaying could be helpful. She said her young daughter asked if she could rip up a newspaper picture of the man accused of the crimes.

House Doctors pay big fine

BOISE (AP) — The state Consumer Protection Unit has obtained a $38,300 judgment against a Nampa man and his home siding company.

Attorney General Larry Echohawk said Wednesday Leroy Smith, doing business as House Doctors, will have to make restitution and pay civil penalties, after a court ruling that he violated the Idaho Consumer Protection Act.

Smith also has been permanently enjoined from engaging in door-to-door solicitation and construction-related activities for sale to third parties, the attorney general said.

"Evidence established that Smith threatened to harm people who did not pay him, performed shoddy workmanship, did not allow people an opportunity to cancel their order as required by law, falsely held himself out as licensed and bonded and did not provide consumers with legible copies of their contracts," the attorney general said.

Utah teen-ager dies in automobile wreck

BLACKFOOT (AP) — A 16-year-old Mendon, Utah, youth has been killed in an Interstate Highway 15 accident near Blackfoot.

Idaho State Police identified the victim as Arthur Kidman, who was riding in the back seat of a vehicle that left the highway and overturned Tuesday afternoon.

Investigating ISP officer Cpl. Eric Anderson and Bingham County officers said driver Beverly Kidman, 60, Mendon, apparently fell asleep and her car went over the side of the road.

All three passengers in the vehicle were ejected, the offices said.

Mrs. Kidman was listed in stable condition at Bingham Memorial Hospital, Blackfoot, as was passenger Rulen Owen, 69, Preston.

Divine inspiration for saying

L.M. Boyd
What's what?

Samuel Bliss was a preacher ridiculed as an oddball in colonial America. A now anonymous author wrote an allegory about him. It inspired the phrase: "Ignorance Is Bliss."

Lemon juice is antiseptic.

Doubt you've seen the shark at its ugliest. It retracts its teeth into its gums, and turns one of its two stomachs inside out of its mouth, rinses off said stomach in the open sea, then puts it back where it belongs.

Something else the wild turkey can do that most birds can't is instantly take off vertically.

Rich families had numerous children, poor families few. That was the tradition in Serbia, Croatia and Bosnia before the latest generation's ethnic ambition. Elsewhere in Europe and wherever, the poor bore children unlimited, the rich not so.

Q. How does honey kill germs?

A. It draws moisture out whatever it touches, including germs, so dries them to death.

Was there really a merry old soul named Old King Cole? That's what a client asked. You bet. King Cool was the spelling. He ruled Wales in the fifth century. The Romans had just left. That explains why he was merry.

Q. Does poison ivy leave scars?

A. Only if you scratch overmuch.

The French writer Michel de Montaigne thought of marriage while watching a bird cage, and wrote: "One sees birds outside desperate to get in, and those inside equally desperate to get out."

Q. Who invented the shower bath?

A. Nobody really knows. But it's a matter of record that a Union commander during the Civil War – an officer named Muldoon – is credited as first in recent century to perforate the bottom of a suspended bucket to let water run out for such a bath.

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

DEAR ABBY: Recently, I saw a news story on television regarding the possibility of installing public toilets on the streets in New York City. It seems a European company had installed several as a test, which were very well received by the people of that city, with one notable exception – a group of handicapped people who were upset because the toilets were not designed to accommodate wheelchairs. These people threatened to block the adoption of these toilets until provisions for wheelchairs were made.

One group argued that the facilities might be used for purposes other than for the one intended. Still, this action by a few could prevent the adoption of these toilets by the city.

Abby, what is happening to our society? Why should a vocal minority prevent the majority from realizing an enormous convenience simply because they cannot also benefit? My high school civics teacher taught us that a test for democratic action was "the greatest good for the greatest number of people."

Since you have frequently championed the rights of the disabled, what are your feelings about this?

– ROBERT M. JOHNSTON JR., AUMSVILLE, ORE.

DEAR MR. JOHNSTON: I, too, think it's unfair to deprive the able-bodied majority of the convenience of public toilets on the streets because the physically challenged minority cannot be accommodated. Therefore, I would recommend a compromise: Include some public toilets to accommodate people in wheelchairs.

DEAR ABBY: Twice, I've asked a friend of mine to concerts – usually with the opening, "Would you like to go to the concert with me?" She accepted both times.

I was expecting her to pay for her own ticket, but she said nothing – nor did she suggest a "pre" or "post-concert" refreshment on her.

She is good company and I am contemplating asking her again, but how can I ensure that she "gets it" by paying for her own ticket?

– THIRD ROW CENTER

DEAR THIRD ROW CENTER: The next time you ask her, tell her that you would be pleased to have her company at the concert – if she wants to go "Dutch." Better yet, so there will be no misunderstanding... say, "We will each pay our own way."

DEAR ABBY: I'm a high school student, and since I constantly have to fill out forms (test forms, job, doctor, etc.), I have noticed something that bothers me. When you have to indicate "gender," "male" is always listed before "female." Why is this? Doesn't "F" come before "M" in the alphabet?

I would like to see "female" first for once. Is there anyone you could consult to find out why this is? I would appreciate it because I am very curious.

– FED UP IN NEWPORT BEACH

DEAR FED UP: Spoken like a true budding feminist. I acknowledge that the practice is usual and customary, but I don't see it as a put-down for women. (I almost said "the weaker sex"; Old habits die hard.)

DEAR ABBY: You want to hear about recycled gifts? Susie was visiting Elma and noticed a beautiful and expensive-looking beer stein in Elma's china cabinet. Susie kept looking at it, then she said, "Why that's just like the one I bought Eddie!" (Eddie was Susie's husband.)

Elma then said, "Oh? ... Art (Eddie's half-brother) gave it to us." Susie just stood there with her mouth open. She then realized why Eddie's gift had mysteriously disappeared.

Boundary County prosecutor requests interview with Weaver

Weaver

BONNERS FERRY (AP) — Boundary County Prosecutor Randall Day says he wants to interview white separatists Randy Weaver and Kevin Harris about a shootout and standoff that left three people dead in northern Idaho 11 months ago.

Weaver, 45, and Harris, 25, were found innocent last Thursday of murder and other major charges after and eight-week trial and 20 days of jury deliberations.

Tuesday, Weaver's lawyer, Gerry Spence of Jackson, Wyo., stopped at Boise to pick up another Weaver attorney, Chuck Peterson, and David Nevin, who defended Harris, for a quick airplane flight to northern Idaho and a three-hour conference with Day.

"We just shared viewpoints on what did transpire in the courtroom and what will transpire ... and how they thought the verdict was reached," Day said, after the meeting. "I really wanted to meet with them so I could arrange interviews with Mr. Harris and Mr. Weaver."

Spence said earlier he would consider acting as a special prosecutor for free to prosecute some of the federal law enforcement officers involved in the case.

But after the session, he said, "It's my opinion that after talking to Randy Day that he doesn't need any help. He's fully qualified to do everything he needs to do."

Weaver and Harris were charged in the death of Deputy U.S. Marshal William Degan, whose slaying began an 11-day siege at the Weaver family cabin near Naples last Aug. 21.

Authorities were trying to arrest Weaver for failing to appear for trial on a federal firearms charge. Weaver was convicted on that charge and remains jailed pending sentencing in September.

Peterson said he's trying to get Weaver released on bond pending sentencing, since the only crime he was convicted of was a relatively minor one. He filed that motion with the court on Friday and the government has xxxx days to respond.

Degan and another marshal, Larry Cooper, fatally shot Weaver's 14-year-old son, Sammy, in the gunfight in which Degan died. A day later, an FBI sniper killed Weaver's wife, Vicki.

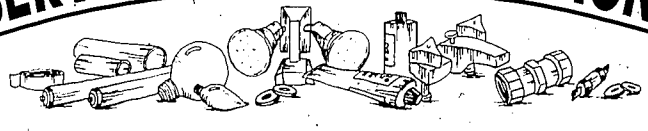

Spence argued to the jury that "the real murderers" — agents of the FBI and U.S. Marshals Service — hadn't been brought to justice.

No charges have been filed in the deaths of Vicki and Sammy Weaver, but Day said the shootings are still under investigation. "Right now I've got a lot of reading to do and a lot of areas to cover," he said.

Spence said later he and the others gave Day a boxful of transcripts. "He's in the process of investigating and has no conclusions made," he said

Final years of the 'third man': Disillusionment, alcohol, love

Philby

MOSCOW (AP) — Kim Philby, the Soviet spy who was the "third man" in Britain's most infamous espionage ring, spent the last 18 years of his life in Moscow as a recluse, disillusioned with communism, troubled by drink and unwanted by the KGB.

But he had love, his Russian widow said Wednesday in her first public appearance.

"Unfortunately, the ideals he fought for were not brought to life here the way he would have liked. But he couldn't change anything here. And he said he was too old to start all over again," said Rufina Pukhova.

Philby, who died in 1988 at age 76, was one of history's most successful double-agents. For two decades, from the mid-1930s to the mid-1950s, he passed British and American secrets to Moscow while working at the top level of MI6, the British intelligence service.

Together with British diplomats Guy Burgess and Donald Maclean, he was part of the Cambridge spy ring — a group of upper-class Englishmen who became dedicated socialists while students.

Burgess and Maclean fled to Moscow in 1951, but Philby was not exposed until 1963, when he disappeared from Lebanon and reappeared in Moscow.

Philby left his British family behind. Seven years later, he met Pukhova, who was introduced by the Russian wife of another defector, George Blake.

Pukhova is writing a book about her 18 years as Philby's fourth wife. To promote her story, she answered questions from journalists at the offices of the newspaper Literaturnaya Gazeta, which published an interview with her Wednesday.

In a soft voice, choked with nervousness, she described Philby's disillusionment with communism under Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev.

Philby was repulsed by "the appearance of Brezhnev, an idiotic figure with all those ridiculous medals and endless speeches," she said.

They lived in a four-room apartment, spacious by Moscow standards, and received a generous KGB paycheck.

"But he could not help but see all the faults in our daily life, because we did not live in isolation, we walked through the streets, the stores. Materially, he was better off than the average person, but he understood everything anyway ... and suffered very deeply," she said.

Pukhova told Literaturnaya Gazeta that Philby never expressed regret for his spying, or homesickness for England. But he felt discarded by the KGB, whose officers viewed him as a "suspicious foreigner."

"Unfortunately, he had too much free time. They really did not make much use of him ... I think his stroke and alcoholism and depression were connected with that feeling of being unwanted," she said.

Later, in the 1970s, KGB agents sometimes brought papers for Philby to work on, but she never learned the details of his work.

Exhibit shows horrors of French camps

PARIS (AP) — Aline Korenbajzer spent her third birthday in the cattle car taking her to Auschwitz, where she was shot upon arrival and dumped into a ditch.

She died in the arms of her mother, who also was killed.

A haunting photograph of the chubby toddler, wearing her best dress and lace-up shoes, greets visitors to a new exhibition about the fate of the thousands of Jews rounded up by French police and deported to Nazi death camps.

About 76,000 Jews were deported from France during World War II, including 11,000 children.

Many were refugees who had fled other parts of Europe.

Only 2,500 of the deportees survived.

Though a spate of recent movies and exhibitions suggest that France is increasingly facing up to occupied France's collaboration with Hitler's Germany, this exhibit of archival materials and photographs is a first.

"History and Memory," on display at the Grande Arche de la Defense through Sept. 26, spotlights three internment camps built and run by the French near Orleans, 80 miles south of Paris.

The diplay is sponsored by the Documentation Center For Internment Camps and Jewish Deportment in the Loiret region. Nazi hunter Serge Klarsfeld, one of the show's organizers, said it was the first time departmental archives from Orleans, the main city in the Loiret, were made readily accessible.

For years, the towns of Beaune-la-Rolande, Pithiviers and Jargeau evoked the tranquility of rural life around Orleans. Yet for a handful of survivors, the names are synonymous with the Holocaust.

The towns were the sites where thousands of Jews spent their last days in France before being shipped to Auschwitz.

Russia OKs ban on preachers

MOSCOW (AP) — Russian lawmakers voted Wednesday to ban foreign missionaries from proselytizing on Russian soil, a move one critical lawmaker said was aimed at American evangelist Billy Graham.

The amendment to Russia's law on freedom of religion applies specifically to foreigners and bans missionary work, publishing, business deals and advertising, the Interfax news agency reported.

The measure, which needs President Boris Yeltsin's approval before becoming law, requires foreign religious groups to become affiliated with Russian churches or organizations or to obtain state accreditation, Interfax said. It was not immediately clear what penalty the law would impose.

"If you fail to get accreditation, and there may be dozens of reasons for that ... you are finished. Even if God himself sent you to Russia," the newspaper Izvestia s250zaid in a commentary Wednesday.

The move was strongly backed by the Russian Orthodox Church, which claims more than 60 million believers in the former Soviet Union. The church has complained about the influx of foreigners seeking Russian converts.

Missionaries have become increasingly visible in the former Soviet Union since the collapse of communism.

American preachers such as the Rev. Robert Schuller, Jimmy Swaggart and Pat Robertson have appeared on Russian television, the Mormon Church began sending missionaries last year, and the Rev. Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church has conducted regular seminars and lectures.

Graham drew about 30,000 people in Moscow's Olympic arena during an American-style prayer meeting last November. During his visit, Graham met with the Russian Orthodox patriarch and both clergymen agreed that proselytizing was inappropriate.

Spies worry about pay, job security

MOSCOW (AP) — Agents of the former KGB, like workers everywhere, worry about low pay and job security. But most have no plans to come in from the cold and get higher-paying civilian jobs.

Those were the findings of the intelligence agency's first job-satisfaction survey, which was released Wednesday.

"The overwhelming majority of our respondents said they would like to go on working, that they viewed their jobs as meaningful. But that meaning has been eroded," said Yevgeny Kozhokin, chairman of a legislative committee that conducted a nearly year-long study of Russia's foreign intelligence service.

It was the first such review of a Russian or Soviet spy agency — dating back even to czarist times — by an outside group, Kozhokin said.

A panel of 12 lawmakers interviewed agents at home and abroad to determine how the intelligence agency was faring following the breakup of the Soviet Union and the KGB itself into smaller agencies.

Leaders of the KGB played a major role in the failed August 1991 coup and the organization has seen its once-privileged position eroded ever since. Among the problems:

• Protests. Demonstrators toppled and hauled away the huge statue of Felix Dzerzhinsky that stood for decades outside KGB headquarters.

• Budget cuts. Even spies had to tighten their belts as a result of Russia's economic difficulties; a number of foreign stations have been reported closed.

• Defections. Some agents have gone over to Western intelligence agencies, but more have jumped to private business in Russia.

Vyacheslav Trubnikov, the first deputy director of the External Intelligence Service, told reporters about a 30-year-old former deputy who quit to join a company that pays him in both rubles and foreign currency.

"He now earns 2.5 times more than I do, and I ... have been with the intelligence service for 26 years," Trubnikov said.

Workers hoist a van from Esashi port Wednesday. The van was swept out to sea by tidal waves generated by Monday night's earthquake measuring 7.8 on the Richter scale.

Death toll exceeds 100 in Japan quake

Scores of residents still missing

OKUSHIRI, Japan (AP) — New tremors rocked northern Japan on Wednesday as hope dwindled for finding survivors from the country's most devastating earthquake in decades.

At least 103 bodies have been found and 91 people were missing.

The final death count could rival or even exceed — a 1960 quake that claimed 142 lives in tsunami waves created by a huge quake in Chile.

No Japan-centered temblor has been deadlier since 1952, when 8.3 were killed in a "great quake" that measured a catastrophic 8.2 on the Richter scale.

"I give up," said Sasaki Ikuji, 52, a construction worker whose house was spared. "I've been through many of these before, but this is the worst ... I'm thinking about moving away."

Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa toured the hardest-hit areas as soldiers, divers and residents pressed the search along northern coasts. He called it "extremely painful" and vowed government assistance.

Officials recorded more than 70 aftershocks since Monday's quake. One measured a 6.3 on the Richter scale.

The initial tremor was estimated at 7.8 and generated giant waves, fires and landslides that devastated fishing villages on this Sea of Japan island, where most of the casualties occurred.

Central Meteorological Agency officials calculated Wednesday that the waves ranged up to 36 feet high. They hit Okushiri minutes after the initial quake, engulfing residents fleeing on foot and in cars and sweeping them out to sea.

Coast guard officials and soldiers ferried water, rice and canned goods to survivors, who took refuge inside damaged houses or in a school gymnasium.

Families spread bedding on the wooden floor of the gym, shoes lined up neatly outside the door. Old women, babies and young mothers huddled together, some of them sobbing.

Other soldiers and villagers searched through the still-smoldering rubble, much of it so badly twisted and charred that it was unidentifiable.

Across from the small island, on the coast of the northern main island of Hokkaido, frogmen looked for people trapped in dozens of cars swept into the harbor of Esashi. Cranes mounted on barges hauled cars and debris out of the bay.

Rescuers used power equipment to try to reach as many as 35 people buried inside Okushiri's Yoyoso Hotel, which was covered by a landslide.

Police said 151 people were injured in the quake.

"The first thing we have to do is take care of the bodies to make sure they don't spread disease," said Fuumoto Inamura, a public health official.

Miyazawa, who faces parliamentary elections Sunday, toured the location of the Yoyoso Hotel, clad in a khaki jacket and military-style cap.

The earthquake was centered 30 miles under the Sea of Japan, about 50 miles west of Hokkaido.

Okushiri, a tiny island 30 miles southwest of the epicenter, took the brunt of the temblor, which matched a 7.8 quake in January that was the strongest to hit Japan since a 1968 quake that killed 52 people.

Report points to starvation, possible famine in Iraq

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Signs of famine have been detected in Iraq, and a United Nations report released Wednesday said a "grave human tragedy" could unfold if no action is taken.

The report by the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization, said international sanctions imposed on Baghdad have caused severe hunger and malnutrition. U.N. experts who visited Iraq in June concluded the country risks "massive starvation" due to the worsening food supply situation, it said.

The English-language government daily Baghdad Observer published excerpts of the report, which was released in Rome. The findings seemed to support the government's arguments for lifting the 3-year-old U.N. trade embargo imposed after Iraq's August 1990 invasion of Kuwait.

U.N. Security Council members have demanded that Baghdad comply with all provisions of the 1991 Gulf War cease-fire before the embargo is ended.

The report coincided with a new Iraqi standoff with the United Nations after Baghdad refused to permit installation of surveillance cameras at missile-testing sites, one of the terms of the Gulf War truce.

It also came as Iraq continued negotiations with U.N. officials over a proposed sale of $1.6 billion worth of Iraqi oil to finance the purchase of food and other essentials.

The report was compiled by experts from the Food and Agriculture Organization and World Food Program, both Rome-based agencies.

It said the mission found numerous signs associated with coming famine: exorbitant prices, collapse of private incomes, rising unemployment, sharply reduced food intakes, high morbidity levels, increased crime, and increased poverty.

"The experience over the past three years lends support to the fact that notwithstanding the justification for their imposition, the sanctions have caused persistent deprivation, severe hunger and malnutrition for a vast majority of the Iraqi population, particularly the vulnerable groups," such as young children and the elderly.

NATO tentatively OKs air cover for troops in Bosnia

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — The United States and its NATO allies tentatively approved a plan Wednesday to provide air cover for about 7,500 U.N. peacekeepers in Bosnia.

Warplanes from the United States, Britain, the Netherlands and France began gathering at Italian air bases to prepare for the operation, which could begin as early as July 22. About 60 planes were to take part.

It would mark the first time NATO planes have been used to protect peacekeepers, although NATO aircraft have enforced the no-fly zone over Bosnia for more than a year.

Ambassadors from the 16 nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization agreed to the plans, but must await final approval from officials back home.

Senior NATO officials intend to give the plan's final details to U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali later in the week, officials said.

The action would support a U.N. Security Council resolution authorizing protection for the 7,500-man United Nations Protection Force, which will patrol the so-called "safe areas" the United Nations has designated in Bosnia.

The six areas, which include Sarajevo, are populated mostly by Muslims.

Under the plan, any air strikes by allied planes would have to be authorized by the United Nations. Officials said the aircraft might also protect peacekeepers elsewhere in Bosnia.

The allies have been keeping the skies over Bosnia clear of Serb warplanes since April.

On Tuesday, the United States sent 12 A-10 and OA-10 Thunderbolt aircraft to Aviano Air Base in Italy from their base in Germany.

ACLU: 'Silly' laws not so silly to those charged

BOISE (AP) — You might think the Idaho law against displaying a red flag or banner is silly. Unless you're charged under it.

"When it becomes very serious, very quickly," said George Patterson, vice president of the Idaho chapter of the Idaho Civil Liberties Union.

He and other ACLU officials held a news conference Wednesday to urge the Idaho Legislature to wipe out archaic and unnecessary criminal laws.

The Legislature is already doing that. A special committee is working its way through Title 18, the criminal laws, with the goal of coming up with recommendations for the next session. Its next session is Thursday at the Statehouse.

But Patterson and Bruce Bistline, lobbyist for the ACLU, want the changes to go deeper. They want the state out of the bedroom — eliminating laws attempting to regulate people's private sexual practices.

They centered on a law against "infamous crime against nature," which bans certain sexual acts.

That's one of the 11 felony counts filed this week against James Edward Wood, 45, in the kidnap-slaying of Pocatello newspaper carrier Jeralee Underwood, 11.

"These things are physically possible and they are happening," Bistline said, and the ACLU said the state should get away from laws defining "natural" and "unnatural" sex acts.

"The definitions are religion-based assessments of what is natural," Patterson said.

"The best case is to take the government out of the bedroom," Bistline said.

"These are obsolete laws that should not be cluttering up the criminal code," Jack Van Valkenburgh, state ACLU director, "They are an embarrassment to Idaho."

Examples of laws and terms the ACLU wants abolished:

- Using indecent language in the presence of women or children.
- Laws on "idiots or lunatics," terms no longer used to describe mentally ill people.
- The law banning the sale of tobacco products to those under the age of 18. "We see search and seizure and harassment problems and feel in these times 16 would be a better age limit to set," the ACLU said.
- Living with or on the earnings of prostitution. The ACLU says that's "guilt by association."
- Laws against "rout" and "unlawful assembly."

Utah governor: Change education

CEDAR CITY, Utah (AP) — Gov. Mike Leavitt proposed Wednesday moving significant portions of Utah's secondary and higher education from "bricks and mortar" to a technological spectrum of learning.

Leavitt offered his four-year plan at a meeting of the Board of Regents, the Board of Education, the Legislature and other policy makers. He said the idea of confining education to the classroom is obsolete, but Utah must become even more accustomed to extending the learning experience.

'License to kill' grizzly issued?

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — Environmental groups charged Wednesday that Yellowstone National Park officials recently obtained a "license to kill" grizzly bears so they could accommodate visitors.

The salvo fired by the Sierra Club Legal Defense Fund, Inc., the Greater Yellowstone Coalition and the Wild Forever Grizzly Bear Project was a precursor to a series of lawsuits the groups are expected to file against the federal government next week.

The lawsuits are expected to accuse the National Park Service and U.S. Forest Service of violating the Endangered Species Act by encroaching on habitat essential to grizzly bears, a threatened species protected by the act.

Yellowstone officials downplayed the charges Wednesday, saying their bear management policies have not changed since they were adopted in 1982.

The three groups said park officials obtained an "incidental take statement" from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service back in May shortly after they announced their intention to sue the government. The statement essentially gives park officials permission to conduct activities that could adversely impact a specific number of grizzlies.

When the environmentalists announced their legal plans in May, they said grizzlies were being killed and injured by the way Yellowstone operated the Lake and Bridge Bay facilities, which are located in prime spring habitat for bears.

Opening the facilities early in the spring brought visitors in contact with bears feeding on cutthroat trout in the area's streams, the groups said.

The environmentalists maintain the impacts could have been minimized if park officials delayed the facilities' spring opening by several weeks. Failing to do this has led to the deaths of six bears involved in conflicts with park visitors during the past 10 years, the groups claim.

"Instead of altering the opening dates, Yellowstone Park obtained a 'license to kill' grizzlies by seeking and receiving an incidental take statement ... to allow continued excessive bear mortalities," the groups said in a joint release.

Doug Honnold, a staff attorney for the legal defense fund, said Wednesday that park officials were more interested in increasing visitor revenues than in the bears' fate.

Louisa Willcox of the Greater Yellowstone Coalition added that the Park Service "has ignored its own biologists and compelling evidence that bears will die unnecessarily as a result of anticipated human-bear conflicts."

"It's the tragic story of park politics in Yellowstone overpowering biology, unfortunately at the expense of America's great bear," Willcox said.

Yellowstone spokesperson Marsha Karle said Wednesday the acquisition of the statement did not mean "we are going to start taking bears out of the area."

She also said portions of the Lake-Bridge Bay areas are being opened later in the year to accommodate bears.

"That's all part of the planning process. It's not like we're doing nothing there," Karle said.

Provo Council tables 99-year lease decision

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Provo City Council has postponed until Aug. 17 a decision on signing a 99-year lease for 200 acres of city property that would be used to build a luxury golf course in the South Fork of Provo Canyon.

The plan to build the golf resort came under fire at Tuesday night's council meeting for allegedly catering to the economic elite at the expense of public lands.

"There's been a pattern with the council to turn public lands over to private interests for projects that enrich only a select group," John Murphy complained to the council. "It's become quite evident this council only represents its friends and business associates."

BOISE — The Portland Trail Blazers will open one of their team scrimmages to fans during their annual preseason training camp in Boise next Oct. 8 through Oct. 12.

Head Coach Rick Adelman said the date of the public scrimmage will be announced later. The team will hold workouts twice a day at Boise State University.

Geoff Petrie, Trail Blazer senior vice president for operations, said the team decided to move its camp out of Portland for a change in atmosphere after the longer off-season than Portland has had in recent years.

"This will enhance the team's focus and is more conducive to quality practice time during camp," Petrie said on Wednesday.

Portland, which played preseason games at Boise State in both 1987 and 1989, has held its camp at Lewis and Clark College for the past two seasons after moving from Willamette University in Salem.

INDIANAPOLIS — A beauty contest participant has sued Mike Tyson claiming that the former heavyweight boxing champion committed battery against her during the 1991 Miss Black America pageant.

Noemi T. McKenzie, who was Miss Massachusetts in the pageant at Indianapolis that summer, filed a civil suit in Marion Superior Court on Tuesday, five days before the expiration of the two-year deadline for making a damage claim.

McKenzie, of Woburn, Mass., claims the incident occurred on July 18, 1991, during a pageant rehearsal.

McKenzie said she reported the incident to pageant organizer J. Morris Anderson, who reportedly told her that Tyson was "just showing that he was in a good mood."

'Missing' boxer tells deputies near Tucson he's doing OK

LOS ANGELES — Former boxing champion Bobby Chacon was located unharmed Wednesday in Arizona, three days after his estranged wife had reported him missing.

Chacon, 41, walked into the San Manuel sheriff's substation in Pinal County, north of Tucson, at 1:30 p.m.

"He said he'd just seen it on the news and had been hiding out due to marital problems," Los Angeles police detective Ken McCourt said.

Chacon has been separated from his wife, Deborah Chacon, for about nine months.

Borah's Snider nips East in double-overtime

By Mike Maller
Times-News sports editor

TWIN FALLS – Seth Snider's three-point play with four seconds left gave West a 64-63 double-overtime victory and the championship of the Idaho BCI basketball tournament at College of Southern Idaho gym Wednesday.

The South team picked up a 69-49 win over the North in the third-place contest.

The coaches of the four teams selected a team to represent Idaho at a tournament in Las Vegas, Nev., beginning Saturday.

Twin Falls' John Krahn and Brady Trenkle along with Brandon Vaughn of Malad will represent the South. Joey Kearns of Centennial, Snider of Borah and Ty Hamilton of Capital made the state team from the West. Off the East squad are Jeff Gee and Thomas Hymas of Sugar-Salem and Jason Buell and Chris Madsen of Idaho Falls. Gee has another commitment and will not make the trip to Las Vegas. The North team contributes David Cunningham and Arron Gould of Lapwai and Brooks McCracken of Garfield Palouse.

West 64, East 63 2 OT

Snider, who had been called for traveling with 19 seconds to play, redeemed himself with a putback and free throw to win the game.

The East had taken a 63-61 lead on Hymas' drive through the lane with 32 seconds showing.

In regulation, the East took its first advantage, 11-10, on a last-second shot in the first quarter by David Baker. The East held that lead, which twice reached 12 points, until Matt Heath tied the game at 51 with a pair of free throws with 1:05 to go.

After two Snider free tosses, the East rang up six straight points to lead 59-55 with 58 seconds left in the first overtime. A layup by Brent Heffner and two free throws from Kearns with 22 seconds sent the game into a second extra period.

Madsen, Hymas and Buell hit 12 each for the East. Gee scored 10.

Jays' slide turns AL East into tight race; Giants stand tall in NL West

The Associated Press

The Toronto Seven did just fine in the All-Star game. It's the American League East the Blue Jays better be worried about.

The first-place Blue Jays start the second half of the season with 10 losses in their last 11 games. The sudden slide has turned the East into a tight race, with four teams -- New York, Detroit, Baltimore and Boston -- within three games of the defending World Series champions.

In case the race stays close the rest of the way, mark down Sept. 30-Oct. 3 on the calendar: It's when Toronto visits Camden Yards to finish the season against the Orioles.

Baltimore's fans booed Blue Jays manager Cito Gaston in Wednesday's All-Star game for allowing his own Duane Ward to pitch the ninth in a 9-3 AL win instead of using the Orioles' Mike Mussina.

But back to the pennant race.

"Everybody goes through some struggles," said All-Star second baseman Roberto Alomar, one of seven Toronto players on the AL team. "What people don't realize is that we came a long way. Two months ago, we were seven games back."

For now, every team in the AL has a chance. Only 8½ games separate the first six teams in the East and everybody's in the race in the West.

In the NL, it will take a collapse by the San Francisco Giants to make things interesting in September. But remember, Atlanta is 104-55 after the All-Star break the last two seasons.

The Philadelphia Phillies have shown signs lately why the NL East might have a race after all. The pitching has cracks and Mitch Williams has been inconsistent.

Here's how things shape up:

AL EAST

Each team needs a starting pitcher and the first to find one might be able to establish a comfortable lead. Last season, the Blue Jays got David Cone in August. This year, it could be the Mets' Sid Fernandez.

Dave Stewart (4-4, 4.69) and Jack Morris (5-9, 7.41) are showing their age. The Blue Jays' best starter is Pat Hentgen (11-4), but he's only 4-4 at home.

The Blue Jays have a 5.49 ERA in July and Joe Carter is batting .179 this month.

The Yankees are coming off a 2-8 trip to the West Coast. Despite collapsing in the late innings several times, New York actu-

Faldo prepares to defend British Open title

The Associated Press

SANDWICH, England — "Ching! Ching!"

It's the sound of the slot machine and the cash register, the sound of money, and Nick Faldo is ringing it up hole after hole in his final practice round before he begins defense Thursday of his British Open title.

A 10-foot birdie putt bumps along slowly into the 8th hole at Royal St. George's, he punches the air with an uppercut and rings it up again:

"Ching! Ching!"

Applause and laughter from the gallery, then he turns to his longtime caddy, Fanny Sunesson, and says softly with cocky coolness:

"It's like taking candy from a baby."

Changing clubs, Faldo tosses a few balls into the bunker on the right side of the green and pops them out. The first settles 6 inches from the cup, the second 3 inches closer, the third a foot

Darrington tries for record 7

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

CALDWELL — Karen Darrington of Boise will be seeking some Idaho women's golf history today when she opens defense of her state title at Caldwell's Purple Sage Golf Course.

Darrington, a Twin Falls native, tied Nampa's Vikie Mallea with a sixth state title last year at Burley. No one has ever won seven, according to Idaho Women's Golf Association journals.

Not a lot apparently has changed from last year when Darrington lost a lead early on the final nine at Burley and then swooped from behind with consecutive birdies on 16 and 17 to outlast four-time champion Jean Smith of Boise and high schooler Andrea Baxter.

Those three will again be in the field along with Rigby wunderkind Jody Neimann and a return to the golf wars for homestanding Sue Kushlan.

There will be other names showing up. Twin Falls' Virginia Undhjem, a four-time winner, says this will be her last try for state at an away course.

"I don't like to be gone from home overnight anymore," says the former champion who has been fighting diabetes for years. "I've pretty much decided to limit my tournament appearances to courses right around Twin Falls. If I can drive there and back each day, I'll play."

"But this time I'm going up there with the hope of playing respectably and not embarrassing myself," she said.

Last year, Baxter made a solid run at the establishment — basically Darrington, Smith, Undhjem and a couple others. This time she probably has the game and the confidence to win it."

She took the high school state title

JACKSON, Wyo. — Boise's Jeff Thomsen defeated Twin Falls' Mike Hamblin and Ron Ptacek of Meridian in a playoff Wednesday to claim the Rocky Mountain Section PGA golf championship.

The victory, after the trio tied at four-under 140 for the two days, makes Thomsen the section's representative in the PGA club professional championship Oct. 7-10 at Palm Beach Gardens, Fla.

Thomsen and Hamblin also earned exemptions into the Nike Boise Open Sept. 20-26 at Hillcrest Country Club in Boise.

John Haines, Teton Pines resort pro, won the section senior title and will play in the senior finals Oct. 26-29 at Ballen Isles in Palm Beach Gardens, also.

Hamblin and Ptacek bounced back with three-under par 69s to tie Thomsen who was consistent with two 70s.

Del Ericson, Twin Falls, also had a 69 to finish in a tie for seventh place.

142: Bob Eames, Burley.
143: Del Ericson, Rupert; Jon Carroll, Caldwell.
144: Tom Andersch, Lowell; Tad Holloway, Boise; Jay Frank, Sidney; Pat Ericson, Twin Falls, and Chris Eastman, St. Anthony.
145: Jon Olsen, Nampa.
147: Steve Meyerhoeffer, Twin Falls; Mike Wynne, Jackson; John Graham, Idaho Falls; John Haines, Jackson; Dave Way, Elko, and Doyle Cordell, Ketchum.

Cubans dump Americans at world track event

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — It took a week, but no one can accuse World University Games organizers of trying to sweep poor turnouts under the WUG.

Total attendance figures available Tuesday, July 13, paint a disappointing picture. The first WUG held in the United States drew 200,988 paying customers for the first seven days — including more than 70,000 for opening ceremonies.

Not every venue had reported for all of the sessions by Wednesday, however.

"We are nearing completion of the drop count — the number of people who show up — for all the events," Kathy Scanlan, games executive director said. "The people who are selling tickets also are the ones making the counts.

"Nobody wants to know more than I do, but should we pull the people off selling tickets to see how we have done? Or should we keep them on selling tickets?"

Scanlan added she "will take the criticism for not being able to get hard numbers. ... Our priority is to get tickets into people's hands."

Other than the strong showing for the opening ceremonies at Rich Stadium, and solid turnouts at gymnastics in Niagara Falls — a near-sellout crowd of 6,834 saw the individual apparatus finals Tuesday night — attendance has lagged at most sites. Crowds at basketball, particularly at Memorial Auditorium, have been small, rarely approaching one third of capacity at the 16,000-seat arena.

The U.S. men routed Croatia 106-65 for their fifth consecutive victory Wednesday night. They will meet China (2-1) in the semifinals. The United States has won its five games by an average of 43 points.

Carlos Rogers of Tennessee State led the United States with 20 points and seven rebounds.

The American women bounced back from their loss to Cuba with an 88-67 victory over Japan that qualified them for the semifinals. Tari Phillips of Central Florida had 25 points and nine rebounds to lead the United States, while Trisha Stafford of Georgia had 14 points and 10 rebounds.

Cuba players celebrate a two-run double in the second inning of Wednesday's game against the United States team. Cuba won, 7-2, eliminating the Americans from competition.

The only team sport that has drawn reasonably well is baseball, although many of the folks in the seats have gotten in for free. Approximately 11,000 saw Canada play Cuba at Pilot Field on Sunday, but the official attendance was 2,200. The rest of the crowd was comprised of athletes, games officials, volunteers and media. "The crowds at Batavia have pleasantly surprised us," Scanlan said of the Class A minor league facility. "We never dreamed we'd be close to sellouts there. We expected crowds in the hundreds, not over 1,000."

But Wednesday's 7-2 victory by Cuba over the United States that eliminated the Americans from gold medal contention drew only about 2,000 to Pilot Field in downtown Buffalo in intermittent rain showers.

The Americans committed three errors in their third straight loss after opening with three victories. They made seven errors in those defeats and now must hope for a chance at the bronze medal.

Coach John Anderson of Minnesota said his team lost focus.

"Sometimes things come to you fairly easy and I think young players forget how much work and effort and concentration and intensity that it takes to win," he said.

Organizers hoped to generate $6 million in ticket sales, but don't seem likely to approach that at the current pace.

Scanlan noted, however, that highlight events such as medals rounds in baseball, basketball and volleyball, plus all finals in track and field, had not begun. Closing ceremonies at 16,000-seat UB Stadium on the campus of the University of Buffalo also is expected to draw well, with less than 2,000 seats unsold through Wednesday. "We've had an enormous surge in walkup ticket sales," Scanlan said. "We've even still been getting mail orders, if you can imagine that."

Scanlan said she was pleased with security at the games, even though three Cuban athletes left their teams and two have said they are defecting.

"We've heard nothing from the Cubans about security," she said.

Indeed, several Cuban delegation officials have insisted that WUG security was not to blame for the departures of two baseball players and a fencer.

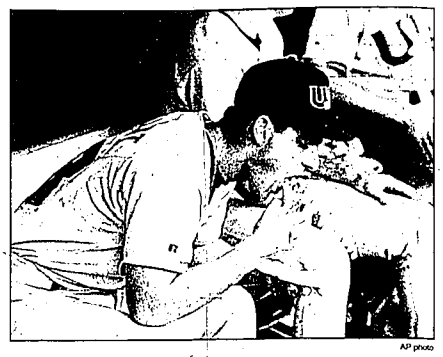

"The New York State Police is the best, and I'm not from New York," Scanlan said. "We have an almost perfect balance between security and having the free atmosphere of the games."

Scheduling problems have not been brought to Scanlan's attention, she said. Earlier this week, several medalists in gymnastics said they were unaware that a competition session scheduled for the next day would not be held. They were informed by the media at a news conference following the medals ceremony.

Heather Willens of Stanford lost in the quarterfinals of women's tennis to Jing Yi of China 6-1, 6-1. So did Michael Sell of Georgia and Rob Givone of Georgia Tech, who fell to Czechs Martin Dvoracek and Robert Jahl 6-3, 6-1 in the semifinals.

Two Americans advanced to the finals of women's 1-meter diving. Carrie Zarse of Michigan was second to China's Xiaoline Yu of China in prelims, with Melisa Moses of Florida 11th. Sherry Wigginton of Texas did not advance.

Qualifying began in track and field Wednesday, with the only finals scheduled in the 10,000-meter walk.

Los Angeles Times

SANDWICH, England — Jack Nicklaus thought he might be in surgery this week, not preparing for the British Open.

There had been pain in his left shoulder for months and Nicklaus figured he would have to have it operated on after last week's U.S. Senior Open at Cherry Hills.

But a funny thing happened on the way to the surgery. Nicklaus won the tournament, snapping a three-year winless drought.

"I went to the Senior Open thinking it would be my last tournament of the year," Nicklaus said Wednesday after a practice round. "Then, I got there, changed some things in my swing and it hasn't hurt me since."

Nicklaus decided, last Saturday, the night before he clinched his senior victory, that he would play this week at Royal St. George's.

Nicklaus, 55, did not want to come to the British Open if he was not playing well.

"I didn't want to come over here and take up a spot if I wasn't competitive," he said.

Open Notebook

Sunday's victory has done wonders for Nicklaus' confidence.

"I don't care whether it's a senior event, a regular event, whatever it is, it's fun to win," he said.

Nicklaus does not figure to be a factor here. He has three British Open titles in his illustrious career, but did not play well in Opens at Royal St. George's in 1981 and '85.

Still, an old spark seems to have been rekindled.

"I'm not here to finish 40th," Nicklaus said. "If I didn't think I had a chance, I wouldn't be here."

John Daly, the tour's longest hitter and a recovering alcoholic, said he is enjoying sobriety. He admits, though, he is trying to kick another addiction.

"I've gone 11 days without eating chocolate," he said. "Peanut M&Ms. It's real tough. One addiction to another. But right now, I feel happy with myself. I'm seeing things a totally different way. I'm proud of myself."

The London Sun reported Daly's distance covered a-length equivalent to 42 London buses.

Dodgers extend Lasorda's deal

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Tom Lasorda, whose 17 years as manager of the Los Angeles Dodgers is second among active field leaders in pro sports with one team, had his contract extended Wednesday through next season.

"Tommy is our manager, period," Dodgers president Peter O'Malley said. "I admire his commitment and dedication to bringing a championship back to the city of Los Angeles." Earlier this season, however, O'Malley, in an interview with the Los Angeles Times, refused to guarantee another season for Lasorda or general manager Fred Claire. The latter's status beyond this season is yet to be determined.

The Dodgers got off to a bad start, languished in sixth place in the National League West and stood 14-22 on May 16. Then they won 11 straight games.

away. He climbs up to the green to inspect his work, then quips to his caddy.

"You can take that magnet out of your pocket, Fanny."

More laughs. Is this guy loose or what? A year ago at Muirfield he sought to change his image as the "mechanical man."

"Call me Monsieur Naturel," he said.

Faldo showed his emotions when he cried unashamedly after sinking the winning putt, and now he's the 6-1 betting favorite again and joking with the crowd.

At the 9th on Wednesday, his approach shot skims the fairway and rolls within 5 inches of the pin.

He struts toward the ball, chest out, shoulders back, head high — the embodiment of confidence dressed in black. David Leadbetter, his coach, moseys behind carrying a rolled-up umbrella on this warm, dry, blue-gray day before the evening showers.

"We've got a little gambling game — around the course, trying to imagine going to keep his attention," Leadbetter says. "He's relaxed. That's the most important thing."

They work on Faldo's swing one last time before he goes for a championship that could redefine his status in the game. He's already one of the dominant players of his generation with three British Opens and two Masters. Another major would lift him to a higher level with the likes of Tom Watson, Arnold Palmer, Lee Trevino and a few others — all on a plateau below Ben Hogan and, a couple of levels below Jack Nicklaus.

Meanwhile, the man Faldo fought down the stretch last year, runnerup John Cook, is feeling his way where balls will go in the shifting winds.

"I have never been haunted by last year," Cook says of the lead he took, then lost, in the final round at Muirfield. "It goes through your mind, but I am definitely a better player for it. I learned what majors are about last year. If I get myself back in that chance again, I can finish the job."

ally gained on Toronto and trails by one game.

Give the Yankees an edge in schedule and pitching. New York plays most of its games at home the next six weeks and must take advantage.

Detroit has 105 homers, but the Tigers pitching is weak.

Boston climbed back into the race without Roger Clemens. Clemens' time on the disabled list might help him in September when he tends to fade.

AL WEST

From top to bottom, the West is separated by 8½ games.

The Chicago White Sox have the best talent but can't put together a winning streak. They hold a one-game lead over Kansas City and Texas. Seattle and California are two out.

The sleeper's in Seattle. Manager Lou Piniella has kept the Mariners close despite numerous injuries.

With Tony La Russa managing and Dennis Eckersley heating up, don't ever count the A's out of it. But Oakland needs another starter.

Texas is staying close without Jose Canseco, thanks to Juan Gonzalez, Rafael Palmeiro and Deal Palmer. But the Rangers' top winner is Charlie Leibrandt (9-4).

NL EAST

It seems only yesterday the St. Louis Cardinals were 11½ games behind the Phillies. The Cardinals used their old formula of pitching, speed and defense to move within five games.

Greg Jefferies is batting .343 and the Cards .271 as a team. The addition of a starter might even put St. Louis within a game or two.

It looked like the Phillies' year for a while. But Curt Schilling, Tommy Greene and Terry Mulholland have been shaky lately and the Phillies don't have a relief pitcher to match big Lee Smith.

The Phillies should hang on if their pitching rebounds. If not, see you in St. Louis.

NL WEST

The best team in baseball? It's the San Francisco Giants right now. Barry Bonds is on his way to a third consecutive MVP and Robby Thompson is having a career year.

Rookie manager Dusty Baker is a little concerned about his pitching going into the second half. Trevor Wilson is hurting and it's unlikely John Burkett, Bud Black and Bill Swift can keep up their first-half pace.

The Giants might try for Dennis Martinez of the Expos or Greg Harris of the Padres.

Atlanta was picked by just about everyone. The pitching hasn't been the problem, either. The Braves have scored two runs or less in 30 games this year.

in head-to-head competition with Neimann, a talented but emotional player. Neimann stretches no one imagination if she wins it, however.

Kushlan's return adds another spice to the brew. The former professional plays just about all her golf on Purple Sage, which her husband, Glenn, is a greenskeeper.

Kushlan's usual liability is having played only a couple of times by this time of year.

"I've played a little more but mostly nine hole rounds early in the morning. We'll just have to see if I can play as well at 11 a.m. as I have been at 6:30," she said with a smile.

She also cautioned everyone not to read too much into her "two" handicap.

"It turns out six of my scores were turned in net instead of gross," she said with a chuckle.

Kushlan expects a donnybrook, noting "I haven't seen the course in this good of shape for several years."

Purple Sage was dry and hard the last time women's state was held there. It also is a course with a reputation for wind.

The championship flight will late, early, late tee time assignments for the three-day event, which concludes Saturday afternoon.

Jerome man will enter Hall of Fame

By H.R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME - A Jerome man has been selected for induction in the high school Hall of Fame.

Jerry Diehl, former principal of Jerome High School, will be honored during the 14th annual induction ceremony Aug. 10 in Boise. The induction will be at 7 p.m., Aug. 10, at a banquet at the Red Lion Riverside. Tickets are $20 each and can be obtained by contacting the Idaho High School Activities Association at 375-7027. The banquet is subsidized in part by the United Dairymen of Idaho.

Keith Williams, of Blackfoot, and Thales Johnson, from Ririe, have also been selected by the Idaho High School Activities Association as inductees to the Hall of Fame. This is the 14th group to join the Hall of Fame and brings the total number to 54.

Other awards to be given are Dick Fleischmann Memorial Award to Jim Chatterton, Pocatello; the Wes Lowe Memorial Award to Bud Ainsworth of Filer, Duane D. Wolfe Memorial Award to Gray and Timbre Wolfe of the Golden Rule Auto Mall.

Diehl has a Bachelor's Degree in agriculture and a Master's Degree in School Administration from the University of Idaho.

He taught health, physical education and coached football at the Jerome High School from 1964 to 1970. Diehl served as Jerome high school principal from 1970 to 1990 when he retired.

As a high school student, Diehl made all-conference in his sophomore, junior and senior years. He was a starter on the varsity basketball team and took first in low hurdles at State in his senior year.

Diehl received the first academic-athletic award given by Jerome High School where he was student body president.

In college, Diehl played varsity football four years and was a three-year starter on both offense and defense. Getting attention from the Pittsburgh Steelers, he was their fourth draft choice.

Following high school Diehl received a Naval Academy appointment and joined the U.S. Navy in 1945. He served as an F.B.I. agent prior to taking a teaching position at Jerome High School.

Diehl was a member of the Idaho High School Activities Association Board of Directors for nine years and has received the 4th District Distinguished Service award.

"Where you find a good athletic program, you will find an outstanding academic program," was the philosophy of Diehl during his tenure at the Jerome High School. The high school was selected as one of four schools declared the "Top School in the State of Idaho" during his administration. Jerome's teams accumulated 68 state championship titles in debate, speech, cross country, football, basketball, golf, track and tennis when Diehl served as principal.

Italian Primo Nebiolo, head of track and field's governing body, is either loved or hated, according to a member of the International Olympic Committee.

Primo Nebiolo sits atop track and field

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — The name says it all for Primo Nebiolo, the self-crowned monarch of track and field who has brought his reign to Buffalo for the U.S. debut of the World University Games.

"Primo," in Nebiolo's native Italian, means "first," the spot he's always coveted in international athletics.

Forty years of skillful maneuvering have made Nebiolo track and field's first citizen. He heads the International Amateur Athletic Federation, track's governing body, as well as the federation that runs the university games. Last year, he achieved his biggest ambition, a seat on the International Olympic Committee.

With his regal bearing, Nebiolo plays the part well, coming to town with an entourage that guarantees his limousines are large, the hotel suites luxurious and his reception full of pomp.

"This is always written in all the places I go," Nebiolo said. "It is a scoop, speaking about red-carpet treatment, the great limousines, the great hotels."

Admirers say Nebiolo is a shrewd, tenacious businessman. Detractors say he lives for the power, prestige and homage he extracts from the locals wherever he goes.

"It's easy to see this guy in two dimensions. Either you love him or you hate him," said Dick Pound, a Canadian member of the IOC. "I think he has a hunger for some personal recognition. I also think he has done a number of good things for track and field."

Perhaps Nebiolo's biggest hitch was the $27 million judgment won by track star Butch Reynolds in U.S. District Court, which determined the IAAF wrongly suspended him for failing drug tests. The judgment was upheld Tuesday by the court, but Nebiolo said the IAAF will not pay Reynolds.

Nebiolo has a wall full of honorary degrees awarded by colleges, part of the price the locals pay for his patronage. In Buffalo, Canisius College awarded him an honorary doctorate Wednesday, Nebiolo's 70th birthday.

"He probably has an ego metabolism that takes more feeding than others," LeRoy Walker, U.S. Olympic Committee president, said of Nebiolo earlier this year. "He is the 'president' and wants to be treated that way. He likes being exalted beyond all others."

Though involved in international athletics since the 1950s, Nebiolo did not become a major player until 1981, when he took over the IAAF.

He got out of the construction business, where he made his fortune, and turned his business skills to track and field. When Nebiolo took over, the IAAF budget was $50,000 a year. Today, it's approaching $50 million.

Since 1983, he has led the Association of Summer Olympic International Federations, and through a crafty change in the bylaws this year, won another four-year stint despite a term limit.

Last year, he bulled his way onto the IOC, though Italy already had the maximum two seats. Using his power with the IAAF as leverage, he induced IOC president Juan Antonio Samaranch to create two wild-card seats, one of which went to Nebiolo.

"I find him to be very focused," said Anita deFrantz, a U.S. member of the IOC. "He wants to do everything possible for his sport. He's determined to make it the best and most important sport it can be."

Johnson throws scare into Kruk

Phillies' slugger shies away from American League, Mariners' pitcher

Seattle Times

BALTIMORE — After facing Randy Johnson's unpredictable southpaw smoke in the All-Star Game, the National League's John Kruk made a conscious, life-saving decision.

"I'll never hit off that sucker again," Kruk drawled Tuesday night after the American League won its sixth straight, 9-3. "I mean, I would veto all trades to the American League.

"If it were the ninth inning of the seventh game of the World Series and it was my turn to bat and he was pitching, I wouldn't play. I'd wave the next guy up there.

"Hey, life's too precious. Life's more important than one damn game. That boy throws too hard and he's too wild. He could kill someone."

It wasn't so much a purpose pitch as a perspiration pitch. Seattle Mariner Johnson's first pitch to Kruk in the fourth inning slipped out of his sweaty fingers, flew directly over Kruk's head and thudded into the backstop.

"With the heat and humidity, the ball was very slippery," Johnson said. "Maybe you'd call that a set-up pitch, but I meant nothing by it."

Here in America's sweatbox, the locals like to tell you, it isn't the heat that gets you, it's the humidity. Well, it wasn't the humidity that got John Kruk. It was Johnson's heat.

After ball one, the left-handed hitting Kruk looked as if he were bungee jumping instead of batting. With each successive pitch Kruk bailed farther and farther away from home plate.

"That first pitch was normal for Randy," joked Ken Griffey Jr., Johnson's Mariner and All-Star teammate. "I saw the pitch and I said, 'OK, that's Randy.'

"If I were Kruk, I would have been bailing out, too. No, I would have asked to be taken out. I see Randy during spring training. I'm not going up there."

A fastball on the outside corner for strike one was followed by two unhittable sliders — strikes two and three. By the end of the at-bat, Kruk's right leg was almost in the on-deck circle. His back was practically turned toward third base.

"It was the worst at-bat of my life," Kruk said.

It was an at-bat that will live in All-Star game lore.

"When he stepped into the box, the guy told me, 'It's nice to be in the All-Star Game, but not with Randy Johnson throwing,'" AL catcher Ivan Rodriguez of Texas said. "He (Kruk) was kind of scared and then he (Johnson) throws the first pitch over his head.

"After that he told me he was going to swing at everything and anything. I was laughing because he was saying many things that were so crazy."

After the inning, Kruk and Johnson walked past each other, Johnson winked and Kruk laughed.

"After he came out of the game, he came back into our clubhouse and told me he was contemplating turning around and hitting right-handed even on that at-bat," Johnson said.

Except for that new version of the slip pitch, Johnson was perfect. Six up. Six down. Masterful.

Pitching the third and fourth innings, he stopped the National League's Murderers Row: Barry Bonds, Gary Sheffield and Kruk in the third. Barry Larkin, Mark Grace, David Justice in the fourth.

After his energy-efficient 22 pitches, Johnson walked toward the dugout, nodded a thanks to Rodriguez and looked into the starry sky, a salute to his late father.

"All I could remember was Barry (Bonds) telling me how he owned me in college," John-son said. "He played at Arizona State and I played at USC, so we faced each other quite a bit.

"But I think I've got the upper hand now. I think there were a few more people watching this game than were watching us in college.

"I faced some of the best hitters in the National League tonight and I got them out. I'm very pleased. It's definitely a major thrill to participate in one of these and do what I did today."

Johnson, 29, was named to the 1990 All-Star team, but didn't pitch. For some, this game is a once-in-a-lifetime thrill. The way Johnson is pitching, it could become a midsummer's habit.

"When you're selected, you're happy to be there. But when you don't pitch, you're a little disappointed," he said. "I was a little disappointed in '90. I had just pitched my no-hitter a few weeks before that. I had a five-game winning streak going. I anticipated pitching in that game. But you don't dwell on something like that very much."

Marlins elevate minor leaguer

MIAMI (AP) — He endured rats in his hotel and screws in his check. He nearly went broke paying his dues.

Then, at age 31, Rich Renteria became a utility infielder for the Florida Marlins. The role is too modest to make him an All-Star, but his climb to the majors makes him a hero.

"I'd like to see a movie about it," Marlins manager Rene Lachemann said. "I'd pay to go."

"It's perfect," Marlins reliever Bryan Harvey said. "He's the nicest guy I think I've ever met."

Three years ago, Renteria was recovering from a shattered jaw. Two years ago, he was on the verge of retirement. Last year, he was playing in Mexico.

"Usually when you go down there," Lachemann said, "you don't come back."

Now, Renteria is midway through what would be his first full season in the major leagues. He hit a grand slam to make the Marlins' roster in the final week of spring training, and won an early-season game with a pinch hit in the 12th inning.

'Usually when you go down there you don't come back.'

— Florida manager Rene Lachemann on Rich Renteria's stint in Mexico

Last weekend, Renteria found himself batting third in the order for three games against the Atlanta Braves. He went 4-for-13 with a double and a triple, raising his average to .299 in 52 games.

"I'm thankful," he said. "I wish everybody could get to this point. I feel pretty good about the things I'm doing."

The 5-foot-9 Californian is a modest and religious man devoted to his wife, Ilene, and their three children. He continued playing baseball long after others would have quit, because it was the only way he knew to support his family.

Rich was poor. Inactivity following his jaw injury wiped out the Renterias' savings account. When he reported to spring training in February, he had to do without a car for six weeks. Until he survived the final roster cut, his wife worked as a grocery store clerk.

Now, earning the major league minimum of $109,000, Renteria will be able to pay his agent of the past seven years for the first time.

"He's more than my agent. He's a good friend," Renteria said. "He'll finally reap some benefits from this relationship, I hope."

Renteria reached the majors briefly with Pittsburgh and Seattle, most recently in 1988. The glamour of the big leagues tantalized a player who had to evade rats in his hotel while playing in the Mexican winter league.

"I never had them in my room, but they were running up and down that corridor, boy," Renteria said.

Reds' owner reportedly wanted loss

CINCINNATI (AP) — A new book about Cincinnati Reds owner Marge Schott quotes former manager Lou Piniella as saying Schott occasionally got upset and told him she hoped the Reds would lose.

"A couple of times, she called me right before ballgames, right before we went out on the field, and said, 'I hope you guys lose.' She was upset at things ... at a player, or whatever," Piniella said. "It gets you down a little bit."

The book, "Marge Schott: Unleashed" also challenges her assertion that her 1984 purchase of the team saved it from being moved to Kentucky.

William Williams, who with his brother James sold the Reds to Schott in December 1984, said they would not have sold the ballclub to owners who intended to move it out of Cincinnati, the book reports.

Louisville Cardinals owner A. Ray Smith and Happy Chandler, a former baseball commissioner and Kentucky governor, had offered to buy the team. But William Williams said he told Chandler during their lunch meeting that the Williams brothers wanted the club kept in Cincinnati.

"We didn't have to sell the team, but we decided we'd like to sell it," the book quotes Williams as saying.

Golf resorts draw $400 million at auction

DALLAS (AP) — The Resolution Trust Corp. sold six luxury golf resorts for about $400 million Wednesday during a high-rolling auction in which the deal-making didn't stop with the final bid.

Four bidders won the six clubs for $404.2 million, but one group assigned away its interest in a club immediately after the auction ended. The total dropped to $395.4 million because two buyers took advantage of a cash discount, the RTC said.

The agency was delighted with the price fetched by the glamorous properties. Although the spreads originally cost $708 million, the RTC assessed their investment value at more like $360 million.

"We're extremely — that's an understatement — happy with the results," said Lamar Kelly, senior vice president for asset sales and management for the Resolution Trust Corp.

"These are some of the premiere courses in the country."

The three-hour auction drew more than 30 bidding groups who became enmeshed in layers of strategy.

After bidders fought over the individual properties in the first round, only one group offered a bid on all six properties, although several had expressed interest in doing so before the auction.

Cavs' Mills works out with Magic

Mills

CLEVELAND (AP) — Chris Mills, the Cleveland Cavaliers' top draft pick, has been learning the NBA-style game in what he described as intense workouts in Los Angeles with Magic Johnson and other pros.

It's a reason why the 6-foot-6 Pac-10 Player of the Year at Arizona thinks he will make a quick adjustment from the college game.

"I'm trying to work on handling the ball more than I have in the past," Mills said Wednesday. "I'm sure I'll be able to adjust to it hopefully sooner than everyone might expect. A lot of the guys tell me there's a lot of tricks to it, and hopefully I'll get it down pretty quick.

"I have a chance to come in and get a lot of minutes as a rookie with a great team like this, so you can't ask for much more than that."

Mills met with the media who cover the Cavaliers two weeks after Cleveland selected him with the 22nd pick in the first round of the NBA draft. He said he would have come sooner, except that he was involved in a bit role in a basketball movie, "Blue Chips," being shot in Los Angeles.

"I'm pretty sure I'll have a part in there, because there's a scene where Nick Nolte does something and I'm standing right there. I don't think I should give away, what he does, though."

He said Johnson, the former Los Angeles Lakers star who has twice retired after he was diagnosed as having the virus that leads to AIDS, in the summer rents out a gym and invites invitations to pro players and a few college stars for informal, private basketball games.

Mills, 23, said this summer is the third he has played in Johnson's invitation workouts in Los Angeles.

But at first he was there only as an observer. "I would come up and watch those guys play. I wasn't well known enough to play with those guys. Finally, he let me play, saying if you can do this or you can do that you can keep coming back," Mills said.

This year, there's no question he's there to play. Johnson called Mills' home asking him to participate.

"Oh man; these guys are serious," Mills said. "It gets pretty rough out there."

There have been times when Johnson halted a game to lecture Mills about something he could have done better.

"I just listened. How can you argue with an All-Star like that? I just try to do it right the next time. To this day I get big eyes going out on that court."

Cavaliers coach Mike Fratello said that after a while Mills may be able to help the team by playing two roles, small forward or big guard.

Judge upholds ruling in favor of track star

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — A federal judge on Tuesday reaffirmed a $27.3 million award for runner Butch Reynolds. The head of the International Amateur Athletic Federation says, however, that Reynolds won't collect a penny.

IAAF president Primo Nebiolo, in Buffalo, N.Y., for the World University Games, said American courts have no jurisdiction over the federation and that the IAAF would pay nothing to Reynolds.

"Never, never. He can live 200 years," Nebiolo said.

U.S. District Judge Joseph Kinneary ruled Tuesday that his court has jurisdiction in the lawsuit Reynolds won against the IAAF, the governing body for track and field.

The IAAF issued a 28-month ban against Reynolds, the world-record holder in the 400 meters, after the runner allegedly failed a drug test in 1990. Reynolds claimed the IAAF laboratory erred in the tests.

Reynolds fought the ban before the IAAF before taking his case to court. The London-based IAAF declined to represent itself in his civil suit before Kinneary last winter, saying the U.S. court had no jurisdiction over its actions.

On Dec. 3, 1992, Kinneary ruled that the IAAF should pay $27.3 million to Reynolds in damages and penalties.

The IAAF filed a challenge to the judgment in March. Because the federation did not participate in the original proceeding, the only issue on which it could question the award was the court's jurisdiction.

Kinneary said the court had jurisdiction because the IAAF's suspension of Reynolds affected an Ohio citizen and his business relations with several companies, including several in Ohio.

Rominger wins stage; Indurain still in lead

SERRE CHEVALIER, France (AP) — Miguel Indurain led a breakaway up the final mountain road of Wednesday's stage and increased his lead in the Tour de France as the cycling race moved into the Alps.

Indurain led a group of five up the Galibier peak, a climb to 8,650 feet. The group pulled away from the pack that included Italian challengers Gianni Bugno and Claudio Chiappucci, who fell far behind in the stage.

LE TO

While others plotted strategy during the day off on Tuesday to beat Indurain, the Spanish cyclist did not give them a chance to execute it.

Instead, he had plans of his own.

Indurain, Rominger, American Andy Hampsten, Zenon Jaskula of Poland and Mejia went up the final climb pulling away from the others.

Near the top, Jaskula and Hampsten backed off, leaving Rominger, Indurain and Mejia heading the final 17 miles downhill by themselves.

Ill health forces Saints' GM out

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Jim Finks, who transformed the New Orleans Saints from a chronic loser into an NFL playoff team, resigned Wednesday as the team's general manager.

Finks, 65, has been fighting lung cancer since April and was limited to consulting with Saints officials by telephone on contract negotiations since undergoing chemotherapy.

"I have received good reports from my doctors," Finks said in a statement issued by Saints owner Tom Benson. "There is an opportunity for me to fight this disease, and that's what I intend to do."

Free agency gives NFL new look; players head to training camps

The Associated Press

In the NFL, July is now the time of year when the only players frozen are free agents.

Following the first off-season in which players were free to market themselves league-wide, all 28 NFL training camps open this week and next — two-a-day workouts arriving simultaneously with the dog days of summer.

Also simultaneous: a freeze on free agency — until next Nov. 9, unsigned players can be signed only by the teams with which they played last year.

But there's been enough action already to make this a very different season, where free agents such as Reggie White (Philadelphia to Green Bay); Tim McDonald (Phoenix to San Francisco), Anthony Munoz (Cincinnati to Tampa Bay) and Ronnie Lott (Raiders to Jets) will be in new uniforms.

And that's not counting trades, generated at least in part by free agency, that have sent Joe Montana and Marcus Allen to Kansas City, Wilber Marshall to Houston and Eric Dickerson to Atlanta. That's six almost sure Hall of Famers (White, Munoz, Lott, Montana, Allen and Dickerson) and a lot more Pro Bowl-caliber players in new colors.

How much will that change the face of the NFL?

Perhaps not very much — other than White, all those big names are well past their prime and Montana has played only one half in two seasons.

The Dallas Cowboys, who went from 1-15 to a Super Bowl title in three seasons, enter camp as the favorites to become just the second team in 14 years to repeat as Super Bowl champions. They made virtually no changes, although the loss of backup quarterback Steve Beuerlein to Phoenix could hurt — Super Bowl MVP Troy Aikman will probably miss most of training camp with back problems.

There already have been two examples of how risky free agency can be.

The Atlanta Falcons lost cornerback Melvin Jenkins — signed from Detroit to replace Deion Sanders — with a stress fracture. Also, offensive tackle Don Maggs, brought in by Denver from Houston, is out four months with a back injury.

Five teams open camp with new coaches — Chicago, Denver, the New York Giants, New England and Washington.

But like free agency, the coaching situation is something of a revolving door.

The biggest name among the new guys is Bill Parcells, who takes over 2-14 New England after spending two years at NBC following his second Super Bowl with the Giants.

Ray Handley has been replaced in the Meadowlands by Dan Reeves, fired by the Broncos after three losing Super Bowls. Reeves' successor is Wade Phillips, Reeves' ex-defensive coordinator, son of ex-coach Bum Phillips and the one-time interim coach of the New Orleans Saints.

The defensive coordinator trend is also there in the other two changes. Dave Wannstedt, who headed Jimmy Johnson's Dallas defense last year in Chicago and Richie Petitbon, who took over the Redskins when three-time Super Bowl winner Joe Gibbs stepped down last spring.

Free agency also turned out to be a revolving door.

New Orleans, for example, was involved in what amounted to two trades, losing fullback Craig Heyward to the Bears, then signing Chicago fullback Brad Muster. The Saints also let quarterback Bobby Hebert go after signing Wade Wilson from Atlanta and Hebert promptly signed with the Falcons.

In other cases, there were three-team movements, like the linebacker shift among the Steelers, Rams and Chargers. In those dealings, Jerrol Williams went from Pittsburgh to San Diego; Henry Rolling from San Diego to Los Angeles and Kevin Greene from Los Angeles to Pittsburgh.

Reeves, meanwhile, grabbed two of his ex-Broncos for the Giants — wide receiver Mark Jackson and linebacker Michael Brooks. But in the spirit of things, the Giants lost two other guys at those positions, Mark Ingram to Miami and Carl Banks to Washington.

Check your brass for wear

Today's modern cartridge has one reusable part, and that is the brass case.

It is important to remember that even this component has a limited life span and must be checked and replaced when necessary.

David Hocklander
Hunting

For safe and dependable performance one should develop the habit of checking brass condition often. There are several common signs to look for in brass which is failing. Splitting is probably the most common failure, occurring at the neck—down the side, and just above base.

The split just above the base probably causes the most problems since if undetected it will often lead to a complete head separation during the resizing, leaving the body of the case stuck soundly in the die.

Split cases go to the garbage heap. It is difficult to anticipate a case splitting, but sometimes the case will show an unusually shiny spot where the brass is becoming thin.

A straightened paper clip can sometimes be used to feel the stretched spot just above the head.

Other case problems to watch for include bent or dented cases, deep corrosion, expanded primer pockets, and damaged rims.

If the primer falls out or is gone after firing, it is likely the primer pocket has been stretched and the case needs to be discarded.

Damaged rims may prevent the extractor from grasping the case properly, leaving it residing in the gun's chamber.

One of the many advantages of cleaning cases is that it makes it easy to spot splits, flaws, and stretched spots. As you handle the brass rotate the cases to inspect all sides.

This is the easiest time to detect even the smallest neck split. Sometimes scratches, which are relatively harmless can appear to be splits.

I've found a quick look under a magnifying glass clears up any confusion.

During all but full-automatic reloading, each case is handled at least one time. This is a good time to not only look for damage, but to feel for damage with the fingers while manipulating the cases.

Finally, a newly reloaded round should be given a visual spot-check before being placed in the shell box. Splits can occur in the seating and crimping phase of reloading. Sometimes a bullet will not start properly and the case will be crushed on one side.

With this degree of attention, few if any damaged cases will make it back into your firearm.

Case life can be extended using reduced loads when possible and by "working" the case as little as possible during reloading.

Switching from full length resizing to neck—resizing not only contributes to improved accuracy, but case life will be extended because the case body is not worked as much.

Working brass hardens it, which leads to more splits and case failures. A process called annealing can be used to re-soften cases hardened from extensive use, but that is the subject of a future article.

It is hard to predict how long—how many uses—brass cases will last. Some calibers are harder on cases and others seem to last forever.

Some may start to split after being reloaded 3 or 4 times, others last 20 or more times.

Keeping brass for the same gun together and using the cases equally will make brass life more uniform. Then when a failure or two is spotted in a batch of 200 .357 magnum cases, it might be time to start checking them more closely.

Now days brass cases represent no small investment for the avid shooter, taking good care of your brass and checking it constantly will contribute to safer more productive shooting.

Survey: Deer range far, wide

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

JEROME — For years the Idaho Department of Fish and Game has figured the deer that pile up behind Glenns Ferry, King Hill and Bliss every winter come from a wide area of summer range in the mountain beyond the high prairie.

But even the biologists have been surprised by the breadth of summer area the desert winter range drains.

The department caught 43 mule deer on the winter range in early spring, using either radio transmitters or high profile collars.

This summer they've found those deer ranging from north of Bliss into the Boise River South Fork above Featherville and Pine and east to Soldier creek north of Fairfield. "We had a report of a collared one being spotted near Stanton Crossing," south of Bellevue, says Region 4 Wildlife Manager Craig Kvale.

While the department was interested in the results, they were too wide spread to help attain the purpose of the study.

"We were trying to identify the summer habitat the deer were using," says Kvale. "We simply weren't getting the locations we needed. We were learning how far the deer roamed but never found enough concentrated to discover preferred habitat."

To accomplish that, the department went back out last week with a helicopter and net gun to correct that.

Kvale said 14 does were captured and outfitted with transmitters. All of them were found in the upper reaches of the Bennett Hills.

Kvale said the does will provide some good information on summer preferences now and then "if it dries out this summer, we'll see how they spread out into fall and through the series of hunts we have in that area."

Because of the heavy winter usage and depredation complaints from landowners, that wintering hunt is among the most hunted from regular rifle and archery seasons through late season muzzleloader hunts. "We're hoping this study will help us solve those depredation problems," Kvale says.

Eagle-eye view

The Department of Fish and Game began observing in March a pair of bald eagles nesting near Blue Lakes Country Club. Their fledglings were seen flying June 26 and July 7.

Young eagles near golf course test their wings – twice

JEROME — The fledglings of two young bald eagles puts a stamp of success on a precedent for Idaho.

The young eagles, incubated and raised in a Cottonwood tree immediately north of No. 12 green at Blue Lakes Country Club, took to the air June 26 and July 7.

Being airborne usually means the young birds have survived the majority of the mortality problems standing between them and a long adult life.

"This is a remarkable event as bald eagles have never nested this far south in Idaho," says Mike Todd, Region 4 conservation educator. "The only other location where the birds have nested in south-central Idaho is at Anderson Ranch Reservoir on the South Fork of the Boise River."

Bald eagles have been seen in this portion of the Snake River canyon for the past few winters but didn't hang around much in warm weather. This mated pair, however, had been reported up and down the canyon much of the past two years.

The department received word in mid-March that the two eagles were at the golf course and one of the birds was holding tight to the large nest, Todd said.

Mogenson reported the first young bird was seen on April 24 and the second one three days later.

The parents spent a great deal of time hunting and bringing food to the nest. Mogenson noted prey items such as snakes, fish, rodents and a coot being delivered to the excited eaglets.

The older nestling took its first flight on Jun 26, according to Mogenson. The other was flying by July 6. Both are currently making short "hops" to the surrounding golf course greens, fairways, sandtraps and roughs.

Warren Thorne, Blue Lakes club manager, said the golfers have been thrilled to have their course chosen by eagles and give them wide berth.

Access to the club is restricted to members and is private property.

Those wanting to catch a glimpse of the family are instructed to drive to Centennial Park on the southside of the river on the Canyon Springs golf course road.

Observers should take a pair of good binoculars or a spotting scope. The nesting tree is back against a cliff that separates the lower golf course from the upper holes. It is about 600 yards east and 175 yards north along the river.

Todd noted bald eagles mate for life. The female usually lays two eggs per year with the incubation period ranging from 30 to 46 days.

Fledgling, or time to first flight, can take up to 80 days.

The younger birds can easily be confused with immature golden eagles. However, the white on the underside of the golden eagle is a more sharply defined pattern than the blotchy white of the young bald eagle.

Bald eagles don't reach full adult plumage until the four or fifth year.

Protection plan aims at sturgeon

The Associated Press

KALISPELL, Mont. — In the wake of an apparently unsuccessful attempt to dramatically increase spawning, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has proposed declaring the Kootenai River white sturgeon endangered.

The proposed designation, published earlier this month in the Federal Register, cites Bonneville Power Administration generating practices and riverside agriculture among the reasons the sturgeon is in danger of becoming extinct.

The largest freshwater fish in North American has not reproduced since 1974, when the Libby Dam was built in Montana.

The Fish and Wildlife Service proposal cited the dam as the primary cause of the sturgeon's demise because it holds back spring runoff, depriving the fish of the flows they need to reproduce.

Earlier this year, a major release was made from the dam to enhance spawning conditions, primarily in the turbulent deep water upstream from Bonners Ferry, Idaho.

But initial findings showed it was of little help.

State and federal officials contend the sturgeon need water flows of 35,000 cubic feet per second at Bonners Ferry for four weeks to improve spawning, but the release from Libby Dam increased flows to just 20,000 cubic feet per second for two weeks. BPA refused requests for a greater release.

The Fish and Wildlife Service proposal said that in addition to withhold spring flows, the BPA's decisions to raise or lower water levels on a weekly and at times daily basis to enhance power generation or recreation has harmed the fish.

Downstream, dikes that protect fields from flooding have destroyed sloughs, important for young sturgeon, the proposal says.

The proposal also highlights disagreements between BPA and the service.

"BPA, on at least two occasions since June 1992, has made decisions affecting flow conditions in the Kootenai River system that adversely impacted sturgeon," it says.

A public hearing on the proposed listing is scheduled for Aug. 26 in Sandpoint.

Conservationist threatens suit over wolf plan

The Associated Press

A representative of a Montana environmental group is considering a lawsuit to block a federal proposal that would release wolves in Yellowstone National Park and central Idaho.

And the director of the Wyoming Farm Bureau says that demonstrates the need for federal legislation to enact any wolf-release plan.

Doug Honnold, an attorney for the Sierra Club Legal Defense Fund in Montana, said he might sue the federal government if it pursues plans to designate the releases wolves as "experimental" populations. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has identified the proposal as its preferred alternative in a draft environmental impact statement.

The experimental designation would violate the Endangered Species Act because there already are wolves in Idaho and the Yellowstone region, Honnold said, according to a story from the Casper Star-Tribune Washington, D.C., bureau.

The designation, which would relax some of the protections the animal enjoys under the act, is seen as making management of the wolves more flexible. It would allow ranchers and authorities to kill wolves that prey on livestock.

The experimental provision can be invoked only if there are no existing, established wolf populations. Federal officials say there's no evidence of breeding pairs in the area, which means the plan meets the legal requirement.

But some environmental groups have said any wolves released as part of recovery efforts should have the full protections provided under federal law.

The Fish and Wildlife Service will hold public hearings in the region and across the country this summer and fall to solicit comments on the proposal.

"All I can say is we wouldn't make any decision about litigation until a final decision is made, but I am willing to say there are significant legal problems with the approach the agency is taking," Honnold said.

Opposition from some environmental groups to the Fish and Wildlife Service recommendation demonstrates the need for federal legislation to enact the preferred alternative, said Larry Bourret, director of the Wyoming Farm Bureau.

While Bourret said he opposes returning wolves to the area, he would prefer the agency's plan because it allows ranchers to protect their herds.

But without legislation, environmental groups likely will challenge the plan on grounds that it violates the Endangered Species Act, he said. Bourret said he would like to see Congress act rather than have the wolf-recovery plan simply take effect under existing law.

Wyoming Sens. Alan Simpson and Malcolm Wallop are considering legislation to enact the Fish and Wildlife Service proposal.

Not all environmental groups oppose the plan. Tom Dougherty of the National Wildlife Federation in Denver said he backs the preferred alternative because it stands the best chance of being accepted by the public.

Dougherty added, however, that he doesn't support legislation to enact the plan because he believes the Endangered Species Act provides the best means of allowing the public to decide how to recover threatened and endangered species.

Wolf fund director questions cost estimate of recovery plan

The Associated Press

CASPER, Wyo. — The director of a group supporting wolf recovery efforts is questioning the costs included in a federal document outlining a plan to return the predators to Yellowstone National Park and central Idaho.

Renee Askins, director of the Wolf Fund, said the federal Interior Department has distorted cost estimates included in its environmental impact statement to make its preferred alternative look more cost efficient.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is recommending putting 30 wolves in the park and central Idaho and identifying them as an "experimental" population, stripping them of full Endangered Species Act protection.

The plan would cost about $6 million, the impact statement said.

Another alternative, allowing wolves to migrate into the park and central Idaho on their own with full Endangered Species Act protection, would cost about $28 million, the statement said.

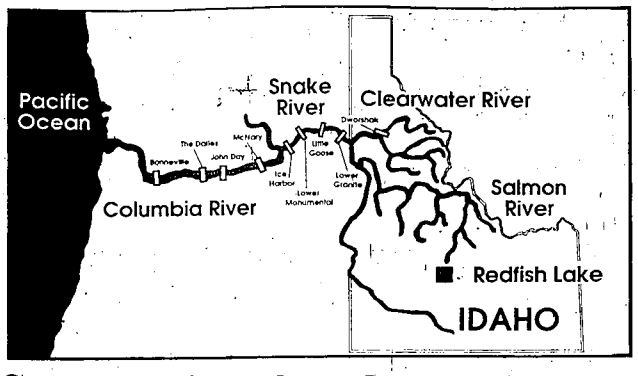

But Askins said the higher figure includes unnecessary costs of about $18 million and added if the costs were not included, the cost of allowing wolves to move into the area on their own would be about the same as the preferred alternative.

She noted that the costs for allowing wolves to migrate into the area included money to purchase land that would be used as big game habitat in an attempt to keep wolves from killing livestock.

Askins said the park has plenty of big game to feed a wolf population.

Spotters find 3 sockeye salmon passing dam near Idaho border

BOISE — The "sockeye watch" has begun along the headwaters of the Salmon River with confirmation of three adult sockeyes between 18 and 20 inches long crossing Lower Granite Dam on June 27, July 2 and July 5.

If they survive the last part of the 900-mile journey, they should arrive at Redfish Lake between Aug. 1-21.

For the past few years, conservationists, American Indians and others who support recovery of the state's salmon runs, have gathered at the fish trap at Redfish Lake Creek, posting a vigil in hopes enough sockeye will return to support the captive breeding program which may spell the difference between extinction and survival.

Sockeye were listed as an endangered species in December 1991.

In 1992, only one adult return; in 1991 there were none, and in 1990 four made the 900-mile run.

The returning adults are hand-spawned and the fertilized eggs raised in a hatchery which ensures greater survival than natural spawning in the lake.

"Each adult trapped at Redfish Lake will help forestall the countdown to extinction inflicted on the species by federal hydropower dams and reservoirs," said Steve Huffaker, Idaho Fish and Game chief of fisheries.

By the time the young of the first hatchery-raised sockeye are ready to migrate to the ocean, the department and Shoshone-Bannock tribes are hopeful that operating changes at the dams will aid survival of the smolts.

Continued use of captive breeding for longer than one generation (four years) risks genetic problems, making passage improvements on the main Snake and Columbia rivers an absolute necessity by 1995.

Last year, the sperm of the only returning sockeye was frozen in liquid nitrogen.

It will be used to fertilize eggs this year if any females survive the migration.

Since the first sockeye were seen, more have been reported on the Snake River dams. The Associated Press report, taken from Army Corps of Engineers, indicated as many as 40 more may have passed the counting window. However, identification of the species is not considered exact in the counting rooms.

Trash fish threaten Henrys fishery

ISLAND PARK (AP) - The voracious Utah chub has been detected in Henrys Lake, further darkening the long-term outlook for the world-renowned trout fishery.

"It could be a real disaster," said Rod Parker, information specialist for the Idaho Department of Fish and Game. "They could take over and could totally change the trophy management of Henrys Lake."

Mark Gamblin, regional fisheries manager for Fish and Game, agreed.

"They utilize many of the same food items that trout do, particularly young trout," he said. "In water where we have abundant populations of chubs, we see reduced survival and production of trout."

Gamblin said the trash fish could have been introduced into the 6,000-acre lake in a number of ways. "The point is that they are in the lake, and they are going to expand," he said. "They will become abundant. Henrys Lake is ideal habitat for Utah chubs."

The detection of Utah chubs is the third disaster to hit the Island Park area in the past two years.

Last fall, thousands of tons of silt were dumped into the Henrys Fork of the Snake River, ruining the prospects for fishing in Box Canyon and Harriman State Park in the next several years. Two winters ago, thousands of fish died in Henrys Lake when oxygen levels dropped in the iced-over lake.

The Utah chub, which grows to about 15 inches, was found two weeks ago during a routine gill net survey. Gamblin said the population is still relatively small, but that it could overrun the lake if left unchecked. "It is very likely, without effective management responses, the net effect will be a diminishing of the blue-ribbon angling quality on the lake," Gamblin said.

Utah chubs have been a problem at Island Park Reservoir for years. Fish and Game used the poison rotenone to kill all the fish in the reservoir last fall. It now is being restocked with hatchery trout.

But Gamblin said he does not expect rotenone to be used on Henry's Lake. Instead, Fish and Game plans to study the lake for two years before making a plan to attack the trash fish.

Possible options include introducing a strain of trout that will feed on the chubs or more restrictive regulations aimed at increasing the size of trout in the reservoir, making them less likely prey.

twice that outside the park," she said. "(Spending $18 million) to purchase ungulate habitat when they've got that many ungulates is just absurd."

Ed Bangs, the leader of the interagency team that wrote the impact statement, agreed that some of the costs included might be unnecessary.

However, Bangs added the costs of buying the big game habitat were included to address concerned frequently raised by the public about wolves preying on livestock around the areas where they are planted.

"People who think wolves should be fully protected generally want minimum conflicts and one way to do that is to purchase habitat, so instead of a bunch of cows on elk winter range you purchase it for big game animals and reduce conflicts," he said.

The alternative to allow wolves to enter the park on their own would also provide greater protection for the predators and more land use restrictions which would require a larger enforcement budget.

In addition, administrative costs would be higher under the migration alternative, Bangs said.

Group pushes salmon protection

SEATTLE (AP) — An environmental group says it will file a petition with the federal government next month to list as "threatened" coastal coho salmon stocks in Washington, Oregon and Northern California.

If successful, the Endangered Species Act petition would further complicate the region's struggles over preserving rare animals while controlling human activity over a vast section of the Northwest.

The petition by the Pacific Rivers Council would also cover all coho stocks in Puget Sound, said Bob Doppelt, a spokesman for the Eugene, Ore.-based group.

In recent years, wild coho runs from the Skagit, Stillaguamish and Snohomish rivers and Hood Canal have not met goals for adult fish that return from sea to spawn.

The petition would call for changes in four major factors affecting salmon numbers: habitat, harvest, hydroelectric dams and hatcheries.

Three Snake River runs already are listed as threatened or endangered under federal law.

The conservation group American Rivers also has petitioned for protection of addition runs in the middle of the Columbia River.

And further salmon listing petitions are expected.

One key to improving the situation is better habitat protection on private land, Doppelt said Wednesday. He conceded, however, that the Endangered Species Act is an inefficient tool for forcing changes on private landowners.

President Clinton's forest plan appears to address most of his group's concerns about habitat on federal land, he said.

The Pacific Rivers Council petition would be the broadest attempt yet to place multiple runs of salmon into one Endangered Species Act listing, by attempting to break down a technical-legal barrier to listing individual salmon runs.

Toll-free line targets poachers across U.S.

ATLANTA (AP) — A new nationwide telephone tip line to snare poachers has had some remarkable success, its organizer says.

Callers can phone 1-800-800-WARDEN seven days a week between the hours of 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. EDT (6 a.m. to 6 p.m. MDT) to report poaching operations.

"The primary purpose is to reduce the illegal take of wildlife in this country," said Leonard Dickson, founder and board chairman of the National Anti-Poaching Foundation, Inc., in Colorado Springs, Colo.

An operator will connect the caller with the wildlife agency in the state where the violation is reported.

The line began operating April 19.

Dickson said that one caller reported a fishing operation in western Virginia. A few minutes after the call was transferred, Scott Renalds, program coordinator for Virginia, called back to explain he'd taken the violation, radioed a conservation ranger who happened to be nearby, and an arrest was made.

"A guy called our number here in Colorado, it was transferred, an officer was called and wrote a ticket and the whole thing occurred in under four minutes," Dickson said. "That's the way the system is supposed to work."

His foundation, which is supported by donations, pays for all the calls, which he hopes will remove some cost from state agencies.

"Prior to ours there were 58 1-800 numbers out there" to report poaching, Dickson said. Those numbers still exist.

The national system eliminates many problems that plague local systems. Callers who want fishing information — a common inquiry on state lines — are quickly but politely disconnected.

A fund-raising consultant, Dickson began discussing the idea with law enforcement officers in 1986. He incorporated his foundation in January 1992 to raise money, and expects his first-year phone costs to run to $100,000.

Plan would move birds to Colorado

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Biologists hope to capture 15 osprey chicks along the Pend Oreille River and move them to Colorado in an effort to strengthen that state's osprey population, Washington wildlife officials say.

Biologists from the Washington Department of Wildlife and Colorado Division of Wildlife will take chicks from nests along the northeastern Washington river.

Only one chick will be removed per nest. Ospreys produce an average of three chicks per clutch.

"The osprey population in northeastern Washington is stable enough to sustain this kind of take," said Woody Myers, a regional wildlife biologist in Washington. "That allows us to be able to help states like Colorado establish populations in areas where the birds are faced with possible decline."

About 103 breeding pairs of osprey are believed to exist in northeastern Washington out of a total of 339 statewide. The fish-eating raptors are considered an "indicator" species because their health is believed to mirror the health of the surrounding environment.

Colorado has captured osprey chicks three previous times from other states for release in Colorado. In the past three years, 35 chicks have been taken in northern Idaho.

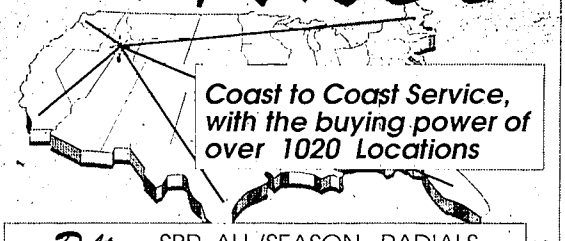

Colorado hopes to establish a breeding population of ospreys in the Front Range, on the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains, said Jim Dennis, a Colorado wildlife biologist.

"Osprey are rare nesters in the Front Range, but this is not a recovery program," Dennis said. "What it is is a preventive program. We'd like to establish several breeding pair in the Front Range as a buffer population in case anything happens to our western population."

About 30 pair of osprey inhabit the western slope of the Colorado Rockies. That population isn't considered large enough to sustain a program to move chicks from the western slope to the eastern side of the mountain range, Dennis said.

Prices hold steady; sales rise

The Associated Press

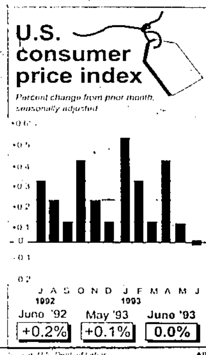

WASHINGTON — Inflation disappeared in June — the first time in more than two years that consumer prices did not increase. Retailers, meanwhile, registered moderate sales gains.

The Labor Department said Wednesday its Consumer Price Index was unchanged last month, helped by steep declines in fruit and vegetable prices. It was the best showing since March 1991 at the end of the recession.

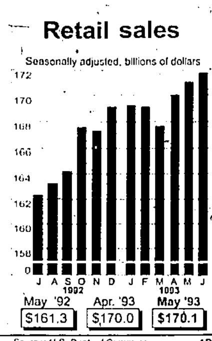

Retail sales rose a modest 0.4 percent, the third straight advance, to a seasonally adjusted $171.9 billion, the Commerce Department said.

Together, the two reports portrayed an economy that is growing but not robustly enough to push prices up.

"There's no boom, no bust. It's not very exciting, but it's better than a kick in the teeth," said economist Paul W. Boltz of T. Rowe Price Associates in Baltimore.

In May, consumer prices had risen only 0.1 percent, but reports earlier in the year had fanned fears on Wall Street that inflation would accelerate.

Wednesday's figures, combined with a report a day earlier showing that wholesale prices dropped 0.3 percent in June, banished any inflation concerns lingering in the financial market.

Long-term interest rates, which can surge higher when investors are worried about inflation, fell on the bond market to record lows immediately after the price report was released. Stock prices rose.

Economists said the Federal Reserve, which had been prepared in May to nudge short-term interest rates higher, now probably will keep rates steady for some months.

For the first half of 1993, consumer prices advanced at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 3.1 percent, compared with 2.9 percent for all of 1992.

State contests Wal-Mart anti-dating policy

The Associated Press

ALBANY, N.Y. — They met at the sporting goods section of Wal-Mart and their romance blossomed on bowling nights with co-workers. Laural Allen and Samuel Johnson never thought their relationship would get them fired.

Allen said they were dismissed by Wal-Mart in February after their supervisor learned they violated a company policy that forbids married employees to date.

They fought back with a lawsuit. On Wednesday they received support from State Attorney General Robert Abrams, who filed his own lawsuit.

Allen, 23, is separated from her husband. Johnson, 20, is single.

"The manager said it wasn't morally right. Who is she to make a moral judgment on me?" Allen said. "I didn't think I was doing anything wrong."

Allen and Johnson, who now live together, are seeking $2 million each from the Arkansas-based retailing giant. They worked at a store in Johnstown, about 40 miles northwest of Albany.

Abrams said Wal-Mart's "no dating" policy for married employees violates state anti-discrimination laws.

Abrams is seeking to reinstate the couple with back pay, and to prevent the company from using its policy in the future.

Wal-Mart spokesman Don Shinkle contended the store did not break state law. He said the pair was fired after "disruptive" behavior that included excessive breaks together, open displays of affection and visits to one another while on duty.

Solomons air war turns hot

Knight-Ridder News Service

To reinforce Munda in July 1943, the Japanese would first carry troops and supplies from Bougainville to Kolombangara island by destroyer then ferry them across Kula Gulf to New Georgia.

At the same time, Tokyo was strengthening its defenses on the Shortlands near Bougainville. The United States tried to use its air superiority to disrupt these movements.

On July 17, a large air strike was sent against a convoy at Bougainville. 78 bombers, including seven B-24 "Liberator" heavy bombers, as well as Navy and Marine dive and torpedo planes, were escorted by 114 fighters.

Only a destroyer was sunk, but 41 enemy aircraft were claimed to have been downed in dogfights. Two nights later, a well-guarded convoy was spotted by a radar-equipped night-fighter.

At this time, only a few planes did or could carry radar sets. In the Solomons, this meant either PBY "Black Cat" amphibians, modified A-20 medium bombers or specially equipped TBF "Avenger" torpedo bombers. As this capability matured, it would give the United States a new advantage in the dark, an environment the Japanese had dominated.

Bombers from Guadalcanal sank a destroyer and damaged a cruiser in a night attack and followed up with a dawn strike that sank another destroyer. But the convoy itself got through.

Better luck came against a convoy heading for the Shortlands on July 22. It included three destroyer-transports and the seaplane-carrier Nisshin loaded with a full battalion of artillery. 54 American bombers (including 18 B-24s) attacked. Marine torpedo squadron VMTB-143 (carrying bombs) claimed seven hits on the Nisshin, which went down a half-hour later.

On July 29, 10 B-24s from the Thirteenth Air Force dropped fragmentation bombs on the Kahili airfield after 21 Marine F4U "Corsairs" had strafed the anti-aircraft defenses. Kahili was the main enemy air base on Bougainville.

The Japanese tried to hit back with air strikes of their own, but their aviation ranks were becoming depleted. The enemy sent daily nuisance raids against the Americans on New Georgia for the first 10 days of July while they mustered their strength for a major effort on July 15.

Among the pilots that met that onslaught was Marine Capt. Jim Cupp, a flight leader with VMF-213 flying "Corsairs." Cupp had left the University of Iowa as a sophomore in May 1941 to enlist. On July 15 he was flying with three comrades on patrol over Rendova when word of incoming enemy aircraft came over the radio.

It was a flight of 21 "Betty" twin-engined bombers with about 40 "Zero" fighters as escort. Cupp and his wing man, Lt. Ted Brown, made a steep dive on the lead V-formation of three bombers.

Cupp took the one on the far right, leaving Brown his choice of the other two. But after his first pass, Brown had to evade a Zero, and Cupp was alone chasing the bombers. Suddenly a Zero was on his tail. Relying on his armored seat, Cupp continued firing at his target until it finally went down. Then he evaded the Zero.

On the way home, he surprised another Zero and downed it. These were the first of 13 planes he would down during the war. The Japanese lost 48 warplanes that day. Their mass attack had failed.

The Washington Post

Two firms that made combat simulators for the Pentagon during the Cold War are striking deals with Japanese arcade game makers to create mock tank cockpits where children — or their parents — could stage realistic battles.

Bethesda, Md.-based Martin Marietta Corp. announced Monday it will license its tank simulation gear to Tokyo-based Sega Enterprises Ltd. may be the ultimate example of "defense conversion," the process by which Pentagon contractors hawk their military hardware for commercial use.

Players who sit in the simulator would observe taped footage of a battle scene — a desert shot that resembles the terrain in Iraq, for example. Using Martin Marietta computers, the players would observe the opposing tanks' lenits and thrusts, and blast away.

"We're not aware of anything this sophisticated out there," said Charles "Chip" Manor, Martin Marietta's spokesman. "The scenes will appear much more realistic than anything seen before this."

Not so, said Marietta's main competitor in the Pentagon's combat simulator market, Salt Lake City-based Evans & Sutherland Computer. In March it announced a deal with NAMCO Ltd., another top Japanese maker of electronic amusement games, for a "next-generation" arcade game.

Its announcement followed by several months a decision by General Electric Co.'s aerospace division to sell simulator hardware to Sega. Since then, Martin Marietta bought GE's aerospace division, and is forging ahead with both Sega deals.

The movie-quality games need not involve only play-acting at combat, although past experience in the arcade industry suggests that's a top money-maker. The computer hardware and software that the two defense firms are licensing to the Japanese could be used to create fantasies of speeding in the Indy 500, visiting Venus, going over Niagara Falls in a barrel or anything else imaginable.

NOTICE OF INTENT TO APPROVE A HAZARDOUS WASTE FACILITY POST-CLOSURE PERMIT

IN IDAHO AND NOTICE OF PERIOD FOR PUBLIC COMMENT

SUBJECT: The Idaho Department of Health and Welfare, through the DEQ Permits Bureau (Bureau) Operating Permits Bureau (OPB) is proposing to approve a Hazardous Waste Facility Post-Closure Permit for Dart Industries Inc. (EPA ID No. IDD000467332). The facility is located off of State Highway 79 near Jerome, Idaho.

AUTHORITY: Under the authority of Hazardous Waste Management Act of 1983 (HWMA), as amended, notice is hereby given, under Docket No. 10HW-9302, that the Director of the Department of Health and Welfare (Director), through the DEQ Permits & Enforcement, Operating Permits Bureau (OPB) is intending to issue a Hazardous Waste Facility Post-Closure Permit to Dart Industries Inc. (Dart).

PUBLIC HEARING SCHEDULE: Pursuant to IDAPA 16.01.05013 (40 CFR 124.12) opportunity for a public hearing may be provided if signed, written requests for a hearing are submitted personally or are addressed to the undersigned and postmarked on or before August 16, 1993. Interpreters for persons with hearing impairments and blindfold or taped information for persons with visual impairments can be provided upon five days notice. For arrangements, contact the undersigned at (208) 334-5564.

SUMMARY/PURPOSE: From 1973 through 1988, Dart Industries Inc. operated a plastics manufacturing plant near Jerome, Idaho. As part of its operations, Dart used a mixture of halogenated solvents (e.g., perchlorethylene and methylene chloride) to clean equipment. During the cleaning, Dart generated a mixture of those solvents, water and hydraulic oil. This wastewater was routinely discharged onto the ground.

Subsequent investigations and corrective-closure-by-removal actions led to the discovery of one (1) area of contamination in the bedrock at which the contamination could not be removed. This area was closed as a hazardous waste landfill and must be properly maintained with post-closure care.

The draft post-closure permit sets forth the applicable post-closure care requirements which the OPB intends to require of Dart. The permit requires up to thirty (30) years or more of groundwater monitoring, to assure that no hazardous waste or hazardous waste constituents of concern are released to the groundwater from the closed hazardous waste landfill. The permit also contains provisions for specific responses to various levels of hazardous waste or hazardous waste constituents, should any release(s) from the closed hazardous waste landfill be found in the ground water.

In addition to the requirements discussed above, the draft permit includes provisions in the event that any "newly" identified solid waste management units should be discovered during the post-closure care period as well as requirements covering the facilities personnel training plan, the contingency plan for addressing emergencies at the site, and the inspection plans and schedules for assuring that the landfill is properly maintained and monitored.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

BOBBY WOLFF

"How comes it to pass, then, that we appear such cowards in reasoning, and are so afraid to stand the test of ridicule?"

— Earl of Shaftesbury.

Today's slam produced huge problems for both East and South. East feared ridicule for bravely ducking his club ace, but he was right. It was South who brought himself most of the shame.

South won dummy's heart 10, cashed the heart jack and frowned when trumps failed to break. Next, he led an enticing club 10 from dummy, creating a problem for East. East ducked bravely and South ruffed, allowing East to breathe again.

South tried his three top diamonds, hoping to survive a ruff, but it was not to be. West ruffed the third diamond and led a club for South to ruff. South threw two spades on dummy's high diamonds, but when the spade finesse lost, he had to concede one down.

How could South have survived the bad breaks? At trick two, he should lead dummy's club 10, resisting the temptation to cash a second trump. Instead, he ruffs the club, returns to dummy in trumps to ruff another club and then plays the ace, king and queen of diamonds. West ruffs, but the slam is safe. West must lead a spade or a club, either of which gives South his 12th winner.
